His neck, his hands, his shoulders, and his breast,

Did next in gracefulness and beauty stand
To breathing figures. Dryden's Ovid.

He executed with so much gracefulness and beauty, that he alone got money and reputation.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

There is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden.

If hearers are amaz'd from whence Proceeds that fund of wit and sense,
Which, though her modesty would throud,
Breaks like the sun behind a cloud;
While gracefulness its art conceals,
And yet through ev'ry motion steals. Swift.

- GRACELESS. adj. [from grace.] Void of grace; wicked; hopelessly corrupt; abandoned.

This graceless man, for furtherance of his guile,
Did court the handmaid of my lady dear.
Spenser.

Whose hap shall be to have her,
Will not so graceless be, to be ingrate. Shaksp.

In all manner of graceless and hopeless characters, some are lost for want of advice, and others for want of heed. L'Estrange.

Furnish'd for offence, he cross'd the way,
Betwixt the graceless villain and his prey. Dryden.

- GRACE. n. f. Good graces for favour is seldom used in the singular.

TO GRAFF. v. n. To practise initiation.

In Marcus's good graffing the fustidius do know,
So long as the wind in the east do not blow;
From noon being changed, 'tis past the prime,
For graffing and cropping is very good time. Isidor.

To have fruit in greater plenty the way is to graff not only upon young stocks, but upon divers boughs of an old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit; whereas, if you graff but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few. Bacon.

GRAFTER. n. f. [from graff or graff.]

One who propagates fruit by graffing.
I am informed, by the trials of the most famous graffers of these parts, that a man shall seldom find a graft having charms borne by his graft the same year in which the initiation is made. Evans.

GRAFF. n. f. [from greffe, French.] Small particles of any kind.

Hereof this noble knight unwearied was,
And, lying down upon the sandy graffs,
Drank of the manna's clear as crystal glass. Spenser.

GRAIN. n. f. [graine, French; grainum, Latin; grano, Italian, has all the following significations.]

1. A single seed of corn.

Look into the seeds of time,
And say when grain will grow, and which will not. Shakespeare.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat in two bushels of chaff. Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond easily, flaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day I would not buy

Many of the ears, being six inches long, had sixty grains in them, and none less than forty. Mortimer.

2. Corn.

As it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the sime and oze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakespeare.

A military vest of purple flow'd,
Levelier than melibæan, or the grain
Of tarra, worn by kings and heroes old. Milton.

Come, penfive nun, devout and pure,
All in a robe of darkeſt grain,
Flowing with maieſtick train. Milton.

The third, his feet
Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail, Sky-tinctur'd grain. Milton's Par. Loſt.

12. Temper; disposition; inclination; humour from the direction of fibres.

Your minds, preoccupied with what You rather muſt do than with what you ſhould do,
Made you againſt the grain to voice him conſul.

Shakſpeare.

Quoth Hudibras, it is in vain,
I ſee to argue gainſt the grain. Hudibras.
Old clients weary'd out with fruitleſs care,
Diſmiſs their hopes of eating, and deſpair;
Though much againſt the grain, forc'd to retire,
Buy roots for ſupper, and provide a fire. Dryden.

13. The heart; the bottom.

The one being tractable and mild, the other ſtiff and impatient of a ſuperior, they lived but in cunning concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain. Hayward.

14. The form of the surface with regard to roughneſs and ſmoothneſs.

The ſmaller the particles of cutting ſubſtances are, the ſmaller will be the ſcratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glaſs until it be poliſhed; but be they never ſo ſmall, they can wear away the glaſs no otherwiſe than by grating and ſcratching it, and breaking the pro-tuberances; and therefore poliſh it no otherwiſe than by breaking its roughneſs to a very fine grain, ſo that the ſcratches and frettings of the ſurface become too ſmall to be viſible. Newton.

GRAINED. adj. [from grain.] Rough; made leſs ſmooth.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid

Why, faith he, where did your great grandfather, and grandfather, and father die? He answered, where but in their beds? He answered, an' I were as you, I would never come in bed. Baron.

Our grandchildren will see a few rags hung up in Westminster-hall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boast that their grandfathers were rich and great. Swift.

GRANDITY. n. f. [from grandis, Latin.] Greatness; grandeur; magnificence. An old word.

Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and brevity. Camden's Remains.

GRANDMOTHER. n. f. [grand and mother.]

The mother of my father or mother. Thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice. Timothy.

GRANDSIRE. n. f. [grand and fire.]

1. Grandfather.

Think'st thou that I will leave my kingly throne, Wherein my grandfather and my father sat? Shaksp. Thy grandfather, and his brother, to whom same gave, from two conquer'd parts o' th' world their name. Denham.

The wreaths his grandfather knew to reap By active toil and military sweat. Prior.

2. Any ancestor, poetically.

Why should a man whose blood is warm within, Sit like his grandfather cut in alabaster? Shaksp. Above the portal, carved in cedar wood, Plac'd in their ranks, their godlike grandfathers stood. Dryden.

So mimic ancient wits at best, As apes our grandfathers in their doublets dress. Pope.

GRANDSON. n. f. [grand and son.] The son of a son or daughter.

Almighty Jove augment your wealthy store, Owe much to you, and to his grandsons more. Dryden.

Grandfathers in private families are not much observed to have great influence on their grandsons, and, I believe, they have much less among princes. Swift.

GRANGE. n. f. [grange, French.] A farm: generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, faith he; the trees were all blasted, the swine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose. Ben Jonson's Discreet.

At the moated grange rides this dejected Mariana. Shaksp.

The loose unletter'd hinds, When for their teeming flocks and granges full In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan. Milton.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chide, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein; unless, perhaps, the said church had people belonging to it: for then they must still maintain a curate; and of this sort were their granges and priories. Ayliffe.

GRANITE. n. f. [granit, French, from granum, Latin; because consisting as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.]

A stone composed of separate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together; of great hardness, giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moorstone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense strata in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall it is found in prodigious masses, and brought to London, for the steps of public buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of a most elegant polish. Hill on Fossils.

Alabaster, marble of divers colours, both simple and mixed, the opulites, porphyry, and the granite. Woodward.

There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple. Addison.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [granum and voro, Lat.] Eating grain; living upon grain.

Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the first peck of their bills, can distinguish the qualities of hard bodies, which the sense of men discerns not without mastication. Brown.

Panick affords a soft demulcent nourishment, both for granivorous birds and mankind. Arbuth.

GRANNAM. n. f. [for grandam.] Grandmother. Only used in burlesque works.

Oft my kind grannam told me, Tim, take warning. Gay.

TO GRANT. v. a. [from grantir, Fr. Junius and Skinner; perhaps, as Minshew thinks, from gratuito, or rather from gratia or gratificor.]

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and so, in effect, they plainly grant that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church. Hooker.

I take it for granted, that though the Greek word which we translate saints, be in itself as applicable to things as persons; yet in this article it signifieth not holy things, but holy ones. Pewson. Grant that the fates have firm'd, by their decree,

The Trojan race to reign in Italy. Dryden.

Suppose, which yet I grant not, thy desire A moment elder than my rival fire,

Can chance of seeing first thy title prove? Dryd. If he be one indifferent as to the present rebellion, they may take it for granted his complaint is the rage of a disappointed man. Addison.

2. To bestow something which cannot be claimed of right.

The God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him. Samuel.

Then hath God's will to the gentiles granted repentance unto life. Acts.

Diddst thou not kill this king?

—I grant ye.

—Dd'st grant me, hedgehog? then grant me too,

Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed. Shaksp.

He heard, and granted half his prayer,

The rest the winds dispers'd. Pope.

GRANT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of granting or bestowing.

2. The thing granted; a gift; a boon.

Courtiers juggle for a grant,

And when they break their friendship plead their want. Dryden.

3. In law.

A gift in writing of such a thing as cannot aptly be passed or conveyed by word only; as rent, reversions, services, advowsons in gross, common in gross, tithes, &c. or made by such persons as cannot give but by deed, as the king, and all bodies politic; which differences be often in speech neglected, and then is taken generally for every gift whatsoever, made of any thing by any person; and he that granteth it is named the grantor, and he to whom it is made the grantee. A thing is said to be in grant which cannot be assigned without deed. Cowell.

All the land is the queen's, unless there be some grant of any part thereof, to be shewed from her majesty. Spenser.

Not only the laws of this kingdom, but of other places, and the Roman laws, provide that the prince should not be deceived in his grants. Davenant.

4. Concession; admission of something in dispute.

But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage. Hooker.

This grant destroys all you have urg'd before. Dryden.

GRANTABLE. adj. [from grant.] That may be granted.

The office of the bishop's chancellor was grantable for life. Ayliffe.

GRANTE'E. n. f. [from grant.] He to whom any grant is made.

To smoothe the way for popery in Mary's time, the grantees were confirmed by the pope in the possession of the abbey-lands. Swift.

GRANTOR. n. f. [from grant.] He by whom a grant is made.

A duplex querela, shall not be granted under pain of suspension of the grantor from the execution of his office. Ayliffe.

GRANULARY. adj. [from granule.] Small and compact; resembling a small grain or seed.

Small coal, with sulphur and nitre, proportionally mixed, tempered, and formed into granularies, do make up that powder which is used for guns. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO GRANULATE. v. n. [granuler, French, from granum, Latin.] To be formed into small grains.

The juice of grapes, inspissated by heat, granulates into sugar. Spratt.

TO GRANULATE. v. a.

1. To break into small masses or granules.

2. To raise into small asperities.

I have observed, in many birds, the gullet, before its entrance into the gizzard, to be much dilated, and thick set, or as it were granulated with a multitude of glandules, each whereof was provided with its excretory vessel. Key.

GRANULATION. n. f. [granulation, Fr. from granule.]

1. The act of pouring melted metal into cold water, so as it may granulate or coagulate into small grains; it is generally done through a colander, or a birchen broom. Gunpowder and some salts are likewise said to be granulated, from their resemblance to grain or seed. Quincy.

2. The act of shooting or breaking in small masses.

Tents in wounds, by resisting the growth of the little granulations of the flesh, in process of time harden them, and in that manner produce a fistula. Sharp's Surgery.

GRANULE. n. f. [from granum, Lat.]

A small compact particle.

With an excellent microscope, where the naked eye did see but a green powder, the assisted eye could discern particular granules, some blue, and some yellow. Boyle on Calculus.

GRANULOUS. adj. [from granule.] Full of little grains.

GRAPE. n. f. [grappe, French; krappe, Dutch.] The fruit of the vine, growing in clusters; the fruit from which wine is expressed.

And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Leviticus.

Anacreon, for thy sake

I of the grape no mention make;
Ere my Anacreon by thee fell,
Curled plant, I lov'd thee well. Cowley.

Here are the vines in early flow'r deserv'd,
Here grapes discolour'd on the sunny side. Pope.

GRAPE Hyacinth, or GRAPE Flower. n. f.
A flower.

GRAPESTONE. n. f. [grape and stone.]
The stone or seed contained in the grape.

When obedient nature knows his will,
A fly, a grapplestone, or a hair can kill. Prior.

GRAPHICAL. adj. [γραφικος.] Well delineated.

Write with a needle, or bodkin, or knife, or the like, when the fruit or trees are young; for as they grow, so the letters will grow more large and graphical. Bacon's Natural History.

GRAPHICALLY. adv. [from graphical.]
In a picturesque manner; with good description or delineation.

The hyena odorata, or civet cat, is delivered and graphically described by Castells. Brown.

GRAPNEL. n. f. [grapin, French.]

1. A small anchor belonging to a little vessel.

2. A grappling iron with which in fight one ship fastens on another.

To GRAPPLE. v. n. [grubbeien, Dutch; krappein, German.]

1. To contend by seizing each other, as wrestlers.

They must be also practised in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tussle or grapple, and to close. Milton.

Living virtue, all achievements past,

Meets envy, still to grapple with at last. Waller.

Does he think that he can grapple with divine vengeance, and endure the everlasting burnings? South.

Antrax here and stern Alcides strive,
And both the grappling statues seem to live. Addison.

2. To contend in close fight.

I'll in my standard bear the arms of York,

To grapple with the house of Lancaster. Shakspeare.

Sometimes, from fighting squadrons of each fleet,

Two grappling Albas on the ocean meet,

And English fires with Belgian flames contend. Dryden.

To GRAPPLE. v. a.

1. To fasten; to fix; to join indissolubly. Obsolete.

Grapple your minds to sterage of the navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shakspeare's Henry v.

That business

Grapples you to the heart and love of us. Shakspeare.

2. To seize; to lay fast hold of.

For Hippagines, vessels for the transporting of horse, we are indebted to the Salaminians; for grappling hooks to Anacharis. Heylin.

GRAPPLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Contest hand to hand, in which the combatants seize each other; the wrestlers hold.

As when earth's son, Antæus strove
With Jove's Alcides, and, off soul'd, still rose Fresh from his fall, and fiercer grapple join'd, Throttled at length in th' air, expir'd and fell. Milton.

Or did his genius

Know mine the stronger demon, fear'd the grapple,
And, looking round him, found this nook of fate,
To slink behind my sword. Dryden.

2. Close fight.

In the grapple I boarded them; on the instant they got clear of our ship, so I alone became their prisoner. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

3. Iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.

But Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd. Dryden.

GRAPPLEMENT. n. f. [from grapple.]

Close fight; hostile embrace. Not in use.

They catching hold of him, as down he lent,
Him backward overturn'd, and down him flay'd
With their rude hands and grisly grapplement. Spenser.

GRASHOPPER. n. f. [gras and hop.] A small insect that hops in the summer grass. The cicada of the Latins is often by the poets translated grashopper, but improperly.

Her waggon spokes made of long spinners legs,
The cover of the wings of grashoppers. Shakspeare.
Grashoppers eat up the green of the whole countries. Bacon.

Where silver lakes with verdant shadows crown'd,

Disperse a grateful chilness all around;
The grashopper avoids th' untainted air,
Nor in the midst of Summer ventures there. Addison.

The women were of such an enormous stature, that we appeared as grashoppers before them. Addison's Spectator.

GRASIER. See GRAZIER

To GRASP. v. a. [graspere, Italian.]

1. To hold in the hand; to gripe.

O fool that I am, that thought I could grasp water and bind the wind.

In his right hand

Grasping ten thousand thunders, which he sent

Before him, such as in their souls infix'd

Plagues. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Kings, by grasping more than they can hold,

First made their subjects, by opposition, hold. Denham.

Doom, as they please, my empire not to stand,

I'll grasp my sceptre with my dying hand. Dryden.

2. To seize; to catch at.

This grasping of the militia of the kingdom into their own hands, was desired the summer before. Clarendon.

For what are men who grasp at praise sublime,
But bubbles on the rapid stream of time? Young.

To GRASP. v. n.

1. To catch; to endeavour to seize; to try at.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less. Swift.

1. The gripe or seizure of the hand.

Not wanted in his grasp

What seem'd both spear and shield. Milton.

This hand and sword have been acquainted well

It would have come before into my grasp,

To kill the ravisher. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

The left arm is a little defaced, though one may see it held some thing in its grasp formerly. Addison on Italy.

2. Possession; hold.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st

For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,

And the rich east to boot. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

3. Power of seizing.

Within the direful grasp

Of savage hunger, or of savage heat. Milton.

They looked upon it as their own, and had it even within their grasp. Clarendon.

GRASPER. n. f. [from grasp.] One that grasps, seizes, or catches at.

GRASS. n. f. [græs, Saxon.] The common herbage of the field on which cattle feed; an herb with long narrow leaves.

Ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bulls. Jeremiah.

The beef being young, and only grass fed, was thin, light, and moist, and not of a substance to endure the salt. Temple.

You'll be no more your former you;

But for a blooming nymph will pass,

Just fifteen, coming summer's grass. Swift.

GRASS OF PARNASSUS. n. f. [parnassia, Lat.]

A plant.

This plant is called parnassia, from mount Parnassus, where it was supposed to grow; and because the cattle feed on it, it obtained the name of grass, though the plant has no resemblance to the grass kind. Milton.

To GRASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed grass; to become pasture.

Land arable, driven, or worn to the proof,

With oats you may sow it, the sooner to grass,

More soon to be pasture, to bring it to pass. Tupper.

GRASS-PLOT. n. f. [grass and plot.] A small level covered with short grass.

Here on this grass-plot in this very place,

Come and sport. Shakspeare's Tempest.

with grass; abounding with grass.

Ne did he leave the mountains late unseen,

Nor the rank grassy fen: delights untir'd. Spenser.

Rais'd of grassy turf

Their table was, and mossy seats had round. Milton.

The most in fields, like herded beasts, lie down,

To dews obnoxious, on the grassy floor. Dryden.

GRATE. n. f. [crates, Latin.]

1. A partition made with bars placed near to one another, or crossing each other:

such as in cloisters or prisons.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couch fellow Nim: or else you had look'd through the grates, like a gemmy of balloons.

Out at a little grate his eyes he call Upon those bound'ring hills, and open plain.

A fan has on it a nursery of lively black eyed vernal, who are endeavouring to creep out at the grates.

2. The range of bars within which fires are made.

My dear is of opinion that an old fashioned grate consumes coals, but gives no heat. Spektor.
TO GRATE. v. a. [gratter, French.]

1. To rub or wear any thing by the attrition of a rough body.

Thereat the fiend his gnashing teeth did grate.

'Blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states character'd are grated
To dusty nothing.

If the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes.

2. To offend by any thing harsh or vexatious.

Thereat enraged, soon he 'gan upstart,
Grinding his teeth, and grating his great heart.

They have been partial in the gospel, culled and chosen out those softer and more gentle dictates which would less grate and disturb them.

Just resentment and hard usage coin'd
Th' unwilling word, and grating as it is,
Take it, for 'tis thy due.

This habit of writing and discoursing, wherein I unfortunately differ from almost the whole kingdom, and am apt to grate the ears of more than I could wish, was acquired during my apprenticeship in London.

3. To form a sound by collision of asperities or hard bodies.

The grating shock of wrathful iron arms.

On a sudden open fly,
With impetuous recoil and jarring sound,
Th' infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Hush thunder, that the lowest bottom shook Of Erebus.

TO GRATE.

1. To rub hard so as to injure or offend; to offend, as by oppression or impurity.

Wherein have you been galled by the king?
What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you,
That you should feel this lawless bloody book
Of forg'd recension with a seal divine?

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, or else you had looked through the grates.

Paradoxing is of great use; but the faculty must be tenderly managed as not to grate upon the truth and reason of things.

This grated harrier upon the hearts of men.

I never heard him make the least complaint, in a case that would have grated sorely on some men's patience, and have bit their lives with discontent.

2. To make a harsh noise, as that of a rough body drawn over another.

We are not so nice as to cast away a sharp knife because the edge of it may sometimes grate.

GRATEFUL.

1. Having a due sense of benefits; willing to acknowledge and to repay benefits.

A grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays.

When some degree of health was given, he exerted all his strength in a return of grateful recognition to the author of it.

Years of service past,
From grateful souls exact reward at last.

2. Pleasing; acceptable; delightful; delicious.

Whatsoever is ingrate at first, is made grateful by custom; but whatsoever is too pleasing at first, groweth quickly to satiety.

A man will endure the pain of hunger and thirst, and refuse such meats and drinks as are most grateful to his appetite, if he be persuaded that they will endanger his health.

This place is the more grateful to strangers, in respect that it being a frontier town, and bordering upon divers nations, many languages are understood here.

Now golden fruits on loaded branches shine,
And grateful clusters swell with floods of wine.

GRATEFULLY.

1. With willingness to acknowledge and repay benefits; with due sense of obligation.

He, as new wak'd, thus gratefully reply'd.

Enough remains for household charge beside,
His wife and tender children to sustain,
And gratefully to feed his dumb deserving train.

In Cyprus long by men and gods obey'd,
The lover's toil the gratefully repaid.

2. In a pleasing manner.

Study detains the mind by the perpetual occurrence of something new, which may gratefully strike the imagination.

GRATEFULNESS.

1. Gratitude; duty to benefactors. Now obsolete.

A Lucanian knight having some time served him with more gratefulness than good courage defended him.

Blessings beforehand, tithes of gratefulness,
The sound of glory ringing in our ears.

2. Quality of being acceptable; pleasantness.

GRATER.

A kind of coarse file with which soft bodies are rubbed to powder.

Tender handed touch a nettle,
And it stings you for your pains,
Grasp it like a man of mettle,
And it soft as silk remains.

GRATIFICATION.

1. The act of pleasing.

They are incapable of any design above the present gratification of their palates.

2. Pleasure; delight.

How hardly is his will brought to change all its desires and aversions, and to renounce those gratifications in which he has been long us'd to place his happiness.

3. Reward; recompence. A low word.

TO GRATIFY.

1. To indulge; to please by compliance.

You flatter between the country and the court,
Nor gratify what'er the great desire,
Nor grudging give what publick needs require.

2. To delight; to please; to humour; to soothe.

But pride flood ready to prevent the blow;
For who would die to gratify a foe?
The captive generals to his car are ty'd;
The joyful citizens tumultuous tide
Echoing his glory, gratify his pride.

A palled appetite is humorous, and must be gratified with sauces rather than food.

At once they gratify their scent and taste,
While frequent cups prolong the rich repast.

A thousand little imperfections are very gratifying to curiosity, though not improving to the understanding.

3. To requite with a recompence: as, I'll gratify you for this trouble.

GRATINGLY. adv. [from grate.] Harshly; offensively.

GRATIS. adv. [Latin.] For nothing; without a recompence.

The people cry you mock them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd.

The taking of use, though he judged lawful, yet never approved by practice, but lent still gratis both to friends and strangers.

Kindred are no welcome clients, where relation gives them a title to have advice gratis.

I scorned to take my degree at Utrecht or Leyden, though offered it gratis by those universities.

GRATITUDE.

1. Duty to benefactors.

That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude towards her deserving children is enroll'd, Should now eat up her own!

2. Desire to return benefits.

The debt immense of endless gratitude. Gratitude is properly a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense and an outward acknowledgment of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, or the like.

GRATUITOUS.

1. Voluntary; granted without claim or merit.

We mistake the gratuitous blessings of heaven for the fruits of our own industry.

2. Asserted without proof.

The second motive they had to introduce this gratuitous decimation of atoms, the same post gives us.

GRATUITOUSLY.

1. Without claim or merit.

2. Without proof.

I would know whence came this obliquity of direction, which they gratuitously tack to matter: this is to ascribe will and choice to these particles.

GRATUITY.

1. A present or acknowledgment; a free gift.

They might have pretended to comply with Ulysses, and dismissed him with a small gratuity.

He used every year to present us with his almanack, upon the score of some little gratuity we gave him.

TO GRATULATE.

1. To congratulate; to salute with declarations of joy.

To gratify the good Andronicus, And gratulate his safe return to Rome.

The people will accept whom he admires.

—No farther than the Tower,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.
Since nature could behold so dire a crime,
I gratulate at least my native clime,
That such a land, which such a monster bore,
So far is distant from our Throned shore.

2. To declare joy for; to mention with expressions of joy.

Yet give thy jealous subjects leave to doubt,
Who this thy 'scape from rumour gratulate,
No less than if from peril; and devout,
Do beg thy ease unto thy after state. Ben Jonson.

GRATULATION. n. f. [gratulus, Latin.] Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.

They are the first gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts, arms, and bowels embraced him. Hooker.

The earth
Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill. Milton.

Your enjoyments, according to the standard of a christian desire, require no addition: I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and, congratulating their fulness, only wish their continuance. South.

GRATULATORY. adj. [from gratulate.]
Congratulatory; expressing congratula-tion.

GRAVE, a final syllable in the names of places, is from the Saxon græp, a grove or cave. Gibson's Camden.

GRAVE. n. f. [græp, Saxon.] The place in the ground in which the dead are repositied.

Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his light;
In the church-way paths to glide. Shakespeare.

Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave. Milton.

To walk upon the graves of our dead masters,
Is our own security. Denham's Sophy.

A flood of waters would overwhelm all those fragments which the earth broke into, and bury in one common grave all the inhabitants of the earth. Burnet.

They were wont once a year to meet at the graves of the martyrs; there solemnly to recite their sufferings and triumphs, to praise their virtues, to bless God for their pious examples, for their holy lives and their happy deaths. Nelson.

GRAVE-CLOTHES. n. f. [grave and clothes.] The dress of the dead.

But of such subtle subtilance and unfound,
That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-cloaths were unbound. Spenser.

And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-cloaths. John.

GRAVE-STONE. n. f. [grave and stone.]
The stone that is laid over the grave;
the monumental stone.

Timon, presently prepare thy grave;
Lye where the light foam of the sea may beat Thy grave-stone daily. Shakespeare's Timon.

To GRAVE. v. a. preter. grav'd; part.
pass. grav'd. [graver, Fr. graver.]

1. To insculp; to carve a figure or inscription in any hard substance.

Cornice with bossy sculptures graven. Milton.
Later vows, oaths, or leagues can never blot out those former gravings or characters, which by just and lawful oaths were made upon their souls. King Charles.

Thy sum of duty let two words contain;
O! may they graven in thy heart remain,
Be humble and be just. Prior.

2. To carve or form.

What profiteth the graven image, that the maker thereof hath graven it? Hebrews.

3. To copy paintings upon wood or metal, in order to be impress'd on paper.

The gravers can and ought to imitate the bodies of the colours by the degrees of the lights and shadows: 'tis impossible to give much strength to what they grave, after the works of the schools, without imitating in some sort the colour of the objects. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

4. [from grave.] To entomb. Not in use.

There's more gold:

Do you damn others, and let this damn you;
And ditches grave you all! Shakespeare's Timon.

5. To clean, caulk, and sheath a ship.

Ainsworth.

To GRAVE. v. n. To write or delineate on hard substances.

Thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and grave upon it. Exodus.

GRAVE. adj. [grave, Fr. gravis, Lat.]

1. Solemn; serious; sober; not gay; not light or trifling.

To us more mature,
A glass that featur'd them; and to the grave,
A child that guided dotards. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

We should have else desir'd
Your good advice, which still hath been both grave

And prosperous, in this day's council. Shakespeare

That grave awfulness, as in your best breed of matrices, or elegance and pettiness, as in your lesser dogs, are modes of beauty. Mare.

Even the grave and serious characters are distinguished by their several sorts of gravity. Dryd.

Youth on silent wings is flown;
Graver years come rolling on. Prior.

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

Fully-painting humour, grave himself,
Calls laughter forth. Thomson.

They have as much reason to pretend to, and as much necessity to aspire after, the highest accomplishments of a christian and solid virtue, as the gravest and wisest among christian philosophers. Law.

2. Of weight; not futile; credible. Little used.

The Roman state was of all others the most celebrated for their virtue, as the gravest of their own writers, and of strangers, do bear witness.
Grew's Cosmopol.

3. Not showy; not tawdry: as, a grave suit of clothes.

4. Not sharp of sound; not acute.

Accent, in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tone of the voice; the acute accent raising the voice, in some syllables, to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and hath having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation. Holder.

GRAVEL. n. f. [gravier, French;
gravel, Dutch; gravel, Armorick.]

1. Hard sand; sand consisting of very small pebble-stones.

Gravel consists of flints of all the usual sizes and colours, of the several sorts of pebbles; sometimes with a few pyrites, and other mineral bodies, confusedly intermixed, and common sand. Woodward.

His armour, all gilt, was so well handled, that it shewed like a glittering sand and gravel, interlaced with silver rivers. Sidney.

Proofs as clear as founts in July, when We see each grain of gravel. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

Providence permitted not the earth to spend itself in bare gravels and pebbles, instead of quarries of stones. Mare.

So deep, and yet so clear, we might behold
The gravel bottom, and that bottom gold. Dryd.

The upper garden at Kensington was at first nothing but a gravel pit. Spektator.

Gravel walks are best for fruit-trees. Mortimer.

2. [gravelle, French.] Sandy matter
concreted in the kidneys.

If the stone is brittle it will often crumble, and pass in the form of gravel: if the stone is too big to pass, the best method is to come to a sort of a composition or truce with it. Arbuthnot.

To GRAVEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pave or cover with gravel.

Moss grown upon alleys, especially such as be cold, and upon the north, as in divers terraces; and again, if they be much trodden, or if they were at the first gravelled. Bacon.

2. To tickle in the sand.

William the conqueror, when he invaded this island, chanced at his arrival to be gravelled; and one of his feet stuck to fast in the sand, that he fell to the ground. Camden.

3. To puzzle; to stop; to put to a stand;
to embarrass.

I would kiss before I spoke.

—Nay, you were better speak first, and when you were gravelled for lack of matter you might take occasion to kiss. Shakespeare.

The disease itself will gravel him to judge of it; nor can there be any prediction made of it, it is so sharp. Howell.

What work do our imaginations make with eternity and immensity? and how are we gravelled by their cutting dilemmas? Glanville.

Mat, who was nere a little gravelled,
Took up his nose, and would have cavill'd. Prior.

4. [In horsemanship.] To hurt the foot with gravel confined by the shoe.

GRAVELES. adj. [from grave.] Wanting a tomb; unburied.

My brave Egyptians all,
By the discarding of this pelleted form,
Lie graveless. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

GRAVELLY. adj. [graveloux, French;
from gravel.] Full of gravel; abounding with gravel; consisting of gravel.

There are some natural spring waters that will inapudate wood; so that you shall see one piece of wood, whereof the part above the water shall continue wood, and the part under the water shall be turned into a gravelly stone. Bacon.

If you live in a consumptive air, make choice of the more open, high, dry, and gravelly part of it. Harvey on Consumptions.

GRAVELY. adv. [from grave.]

1. Solemnly; seriously; soberly; without lightness or mirth.

Thou stand'st

Gravelly in doubt when to hold them wife. Milton.

A girl longs to tell her confidant that she hopes to be married in a little time, and asks her very gravelly what she would have her to do. Spektator.

Wisdom's above suspecting wiles;
The queen of learning gravelly smiles. Swift.

A formal story was very gravelly carried to his excellency, by some zealous members. Swift.

Is 't not enough the blockhead scarce can read,
But must he wisely look, and gravelly plead? Young.

2. Without gaudiness or show.

GRA'VENESE. n. f. [from grave.] Seriousness; solemnity and sobriety of behaviour.

Youth no less becomes

The light and careless livery that it wears,
Than settled age his fables, and his weeds

Importing health and gravenease. Shakespeare.

But yet beware of counsels when too full;
Number makes long disputes and gravenease dull. Denham.

GRA'VOLENT. adj. [graveolent, Latin.]
Strong scented.

GRA'VE. n. f. [graveur, French; from grave.]

1. One whose business is to inscribe or carve upon hard substances; one who copies pictures upon wood or metal to be impress'd on paper.

If he makes a design to be graved, he is to remember that the graver disposes not their colours as the painters do; and that, by consequence, he must take occasion to find the reason of his design in the natural shadows of the figures, which he has disposed to cause the effect. Dryd.

2. The style or tool used in graving.

With all the care wherewith I tried upon it the known ways of softening gravers, I could not soften this. Boyle.

The toilsome hours in different labour slide,
Some work the file, and some the graver guide.

Gay's Fun.

GRAVIDITY. n. f. [gravidus, Latin.]

Pregnancy; state of being with child.

Women, obstructed, have not always the fore-mentioned symptoms: in those the signs of gravidity and obstructions are hard to be distinguished in the beginning. Arbutnot on Diet.

GRA'VING. n. f. [from grave.] Carved work.

Skillful to work in gold; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. Chenier.

To GRAVITATE. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the centre of attraction.

Those who have nature's steps with care pursued,

That matter is with active force endued,
That all its parts magnetick pow'r exert,
And to each other gravitate, assert. Blackmore.

That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bentley.

GRAVITATION. n. f. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to the terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Bentley.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,

Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope.

GRA'VITY. n. f. [gravis, Latin; gravité, French.]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unobscurable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and vulgar or comparative: absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specifick gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Quincy.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastic tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton's Opticks.

2. Atrociousness; weight of guilt.

No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact. Hooker.

3. Seriousness; solemnity.

There is not a white hair on your face but should have its effect of gravity. Shakespeare's Henry iv.
Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity. Shakespeare.

For the advocates and council that plead, patience and gravity of bearing is an essential part of justice. Bacon.

Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd.

Dryden's Æn.

The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their minds still maintained their gravity. Addison.

He will tell you with great gravity, that it is a dangerous thing for a man that has been used to get money, ever to leave it off. Low.

GRA'VY. n. f. The serous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

Meat we love half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gravy, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter. Harvey on Consumptions.

There may be stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gravy soup. Arbutnot.

GRAY. adj. [gray, Saxon; grau, Danish; grau, Dutch.]

1. White with a mixture of black.

They left me then, when the gray headed even,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
Rose from the handmill wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.

These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites, not in species of colours, but only in degree of luminousness. Newton.

2. White or hoary with old age.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dipped and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grilly, and many others. Bacon's Natural History.

Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation. Walton.

Anon.

Gray headed men and grave, with warriours mix'd,

Assenble. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected. Glanville's Scaphis.

Gray headed infant! and in vain grown old!
Art thou to learn that in another's gold Lie charms resistless? Dryden's Juvenal.

We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear master's service. Addison's Spectator.

Her gray hair'd synods damning books unread,

3. Dark like the opening or close of day; of the colour of ashes.

Our women's names are more gracious than their Castles, that is, gray eyed. Camden.

The gray ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,

Chequ'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light. Shakespeare.

I'll say you gray is not the morning's eye;

'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shaksp.

Soon as the gray ey'd morning streaks the skies,

And in the doubtful day the woodcock flies. Gay's Trivia.

GRAY. n. f. A gray colour.

Down sunk the sun, the closing hour of day Came onward, mantled o'er with dusky gray. Parrel.

GRAY. n. f. A badger.

Ainsworth.

GRAYBEARD. n. f. [gray and beard.]

An old man: in contempt.

Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I.
—Graybeard, thy love duth freeze. Shakespeare.

Have I in conquest stretch mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth? Shaksp.

GRAYLING. n. f. [thymallus.] The umber, a fish.

The grayling lives in such rivers as the trout does, and is usually taken with the same baits, and after the same manner: he is of a fine shape, his flesh white, and his teeth, those little ones that he has, are in his throat. He is not so general a bith as the trout, nor so good to eat.

Walton's Angler.

GRA'YNESS. n. f. [from gray.] The quality of being gray.

To GRAZE. v. n. [from gras.]

1. To eat grass; to feed on grass.

The greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze, and my lambs suck. Shaksp. As you like it.
Graze where you will, you shall not house with me. Shakespeare.

Leaving in the fields his grazing cows,
He fought himself some hospitable house. Dryd.

The more ignoble throng

Attend their stately steps, and slowly graze along. Dryden.

2. To supply grass.

Physicians advise their patients to remove into airs which are plain champagnes, but grazing, and not overgrown with heath. Bacon.

The fowls must be kept so as the water may not stay too long in the spring; for then the ground continueth the wet, whereby it will never graze to purpose that year. Bacon.

A third sort of grazing ground is that near the sea, which is commonly very rich land. Mortimer.

3. To move on devouring.

As every state lay next to the other that was oppressed, so the fire perpetually grazed. Bacon.

4. [from razer, Fr.] To touch lightly.

Mark then abounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality. Shaksp. Henry v.

To GRAZE. v. a.

1. To tend grazing cattle; to set cattle to feed on grass.

Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep. Shaksp.
O happy man, faith he, that, lo! I see Grazing his cattle in those pleasant fields,
If he but know his good! Daniel's Civil War.

2. To feed upon.

I was at first as other beasts, that graze
The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low. Milton.

Their steeds around,
Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

Some graze their land 'till christmas, and some longer. Mortimer.

This Neptune gave him, when he gave to keep

3. To supply with grass.

He hath a house and barn in repair, and a field or two to graze his cows, with a garden and orchard. Swift.

GRA'ZER. n. f. [from graze.] One that grazes or feeds on grass.

His flock daily crops
Their verdant dinner from the mossy turf
Sufficient: after them the cackling goose,
Close grazer, finds wherewith to ease her want. Philips.

GRA'ZIER. n. f. [from graze.] One who feeds cattle.

All graziers prefer their cattle from meaner pastures to better. Bacon.

Gentle peace, which filleth the husbandman's barns, the grazer's folds, and the tradesman's shop. Howel.

His confusion increased when he found the alderman's farmer to be a grazer. Spectator.

Of agriculture the desolation made in the country by engrossing graziers, and the great yearly importation of corn from England, are lamentable instances under what discountenance it lies. Swift.

GREASE. n. f. [graisse, French.]

GRE

1. The soft part of the fat; the oily or unctuous part of animals.

Grease, that's sweaten
From the murtherer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To take out a spot of grease they use a coal upon brown paper. Bacon's Natural History.

Thou hop'st, with sacrifice of oxen slain,
To compass wealth, and bribe the god of gain
To give thee flocks and herds, with large en-crease;

Fool! to expect them from a bullock's grease.

A girdle, foul with grease, binds his obscene attire. Dryden.

2. [In horsemanship.] A swelling and gourdiness of the legs, which happens to a horse after a journey, or by standing long in the stable.

Fair angel, thy desire that tends to know

The work of God, thereby to glorify

The great work-master, tends to no excess

That reaches blame. Milton.

Great are thy works, Jehovah, infinite

Thy pow'r! what thought can measure thee, or tongue

Relate thee! greater now in thy return,

Than from the giant angels: thee that day

Thy thunders magnified, but to create

Is greater than created to destroy. Milton.

The great luminary,

Above the vulgar constellations thick,

That from his lonely eye keep distance due,

Depends light from far. Milton.

 And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands. Dryden's Virgil.

How fearful would he be of all greedy and unjust ways of raising their fortune? Law.

GREEN. adj. [grun, German; groen, Dutch.]

1. Having a colour formed commonly by compounding blue and yellow; of the colour of the leaves of trees or herbs. The green colour is said to be most favourable to the sight.

The general colour of plants is green, which is a colour that no flower is of: there is a greenish primrose, but it is pale and scarce a green. Bacon.
 Groves for ever green. Pope.

2. Pale; sickly: from which we call the maid's disease the green-sickness, or chlorosis. Like it is Sappho's χλωροσίνη νόσος.

Was the hope drunk
 Wherein you dress'd yourself? Hath it slept since?
 And wakes it now to look so green and pale
 At what it did so freely? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof: they fall into a kind of male green-sickness. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Till the green-sickness and love's force betray'd
 To death's remorseless arms th' unhappy maid. Garrick.

3. Flourishing; fresh; undecayed: from trees in spring.

4. New; fresh: as, a green wound.

The door is open, sir; there lies your way:
 You may be jogging while your boots are green. Shakespeare.

Griefs are green;
 And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,
 Have but their stings and teeth newly taken out. Shakespeare.

In a vault,
 Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
 Lies festering in his blood. Shakespeare.

A man that studieth revenge keepeth his own wounds green, which otherwise would heal and do well. Bacon's Essay.

I might dilate on the temper of the people, the power, arts, and interest of the contrary party, but those are invidious topics, too green in our remembrance. Dryden.

5. Not dry.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts; must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are of themselves as dry fuel, apt beforehand unto tumults? Hooker's Dedication.

Being an olive tree
 Which late he fell'd; and being green, must he Made lighter for his manage. Chapman.

Of fragility the cause is an impotency to be extended, and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so dry wood is more fragil than green. Bacon's Natural History.

If you but consider a piece of green wood burning in a chimney, you will readily discern, in the disband'd parts of it, the four elements.

The green do often heat the ripe, and the ripe, so heated, give fire to the green. Montaigne.

6. Not roasted; half raw.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say the meat is green when it is half roasted. Warburton.

7. Unripe; immature; young: because fruits are green before they are ripe.

My failed days,
 When I was green in judgment, cold in blood! Shakespeare.

O charming youth, in the first opening page;
 So many graces in to green an age. Dryden.

You'll find a difference Between the promise of his greenest days,
 And these he masters now. Shakespeare.

If you would fat green geese, shut them up when they are about a month old. Naturalist.

Stubble geese at Michaelmas are seen
 Upon the spit, neat May produces green. King's Cookery.

GREEN. n. f.

1. The green colour; green colour of different shades.

Her mother hath intended,
 That, quaint in green, she shall be lookt on'd. Shakespeare.

But with your presence cheer'd, they scale to mount,
 And waiks wear fresher green at your return. Dryden.

Cinnabar illuminated by this beam, appears of the same red colour as in day light; and as the lens you intercept the green making and blue making rays, its redness will become more full and lively. Newton's Opticks.

GRE

Let us but consider the two colours of yellow and blue; if they are mingled together in any considerable proportion, they make a green.

Watts's Logic.

2. A gruffly plain.

For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town

Shakespeare

O'er the smooth enamell'd green,
Where no print of step hath been,

1. The quality of being green; viridity; viridiness.

About it grew such sort of trees, as either excellency of fruit, stateliness of growth, continual greenness on poetical fancies have made at any time famous.

Sidney.

In a meadow, though the meer grass and greenness delights, yet the variety of flowers doth heighten and beautify.

Ben Jonson.

My reason, which discourses on what it finds in my phantasy, can consider greenness by itself, or mellowness, or sweetness, or coldness, singly and alone by itself.

Digby on Bodies.

2. Immaturity; unripeness.

This prince, while yet the errors in his nature were excused by the greenness of his youth, which took all the fault upon itself, loved a private man's wife.

Sidney.

3. Freshness; vigour.

Take the picture of a man in the greenness and vivacity of his youth, and in the latter date and declension of his drooping years, and you will scarce know it to belong to the same person.

That to the greenwood shade he took his way;
For Cymon thung'd the church.

Dryden.

To GREET. v. a. [grator, Latin; gnetan, Saxon.]

1. To address at meeting.

I think if men, which in these places live,
Durst look in themselves, and themselves retrieve,
They would like strangers greet themselves.

Donne.

I would gladly go,
To greet my Pallas with such news below.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. To address in whatever manner.

My noble partner
You greet with present grace, and great predication;

To me you speak not.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

3. To salute in kindness or respect.

My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you

—God bless your grace with health and happy days.

He had added two bars to the gridiron. Spenser.

GRIEF. n. f. [from grieve; griff, Welsh, probably from the English.]

1. Sorrow; trouble for something past.

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout. Shakspeare.

Wringing of the hands, knocking the breast, are but the ceremonies of sorrow, the pomp and ostentation of an effeminate grief, which speak not so much the greatness of the misery as the smallness of the mind. South.

The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief of it. Addison.

2. Grievance; harm. [grief, French.]

Not in use.

'Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest. Shakspeare.

The king hath sent to know
The nature of your griefs, and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility? Shakspeare's Henry IV.

3. Pain; disease. Obsolete.

GRIEVANCE. n. f. [from grief.]

1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.

2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found against grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity? Swift.

TO GRIEVE. v. a. [griever, French; griever, Flemish; gravis, Latin.]

1. To afflict; to hurt.

For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. Luke.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psalms.

It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. Gen.

Grief'd at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour

Should be to close those breaches. Rowe.

2. To make sorrowful.

When one man kills another, thinking that he killeth a wild beast; if the same man remembereth afterwards what he hath done, and is not grieved for the fact, in this case he hath sinned; because his not grieving is offensive unto God, though the fact were merely besides his will. Perkins.

TO GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for something past; to mourn; to sorrow, as for the death of friends. It has sometimes at and sometimes for before the cause of grief: perhaps at is proper before our misfortunes, and for before our faults.

Do not you grieve at this. Shakspeare.

How didst thou grieve then, Adam, to behold

The end of all thy offspring and to sad. Milton.

With equal mind what happens let us bear;
Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care. Dryden.

GRIEVINGLY. adv. [from grieve.] In sorrow; sorrowfully.

Grievingly, I think,

The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

GRIEVOUS. adj. [gravis, Latin; or from To grieve.]

1. Afflictive; painful; hard to be born.

To the death, as the apostle himself granteth, all affliction is naturally grievous. Hosker.

Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way, and he that hateth reproof shall die. Proverbs.

2. Such as causes sorrow.

To own a great but grievous truth, though they quicken and sharpen the invention, they corrupt the temper. Watts.

3. Expressing a great degree of uneasiness.

He durst not disclose, but sent grievous complaints to the parliament of the usage he was forced to submit to. Clarendon.

4. Atrocious; heavy.

It was a grievous fault,

And grievously both Cæsar answer'd it. Shakspeare.

Crying sins I call those, which are so heinous, and in their kind so grievous, that they hasten God's judgments and call down for speedy vengeance upon the sinner. Perkins.

5. Sometimes used adverbially in low language.

He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick. Shakspeare.

GRIEVOUSLY. adv. [from grievous.]

GRIFFIN. } n. f. [This should rather be

GRIFFON. } written grifon, or gryphon;

gryps, γρύψ; but it is generally written griffon.] A fabled animal, said to be generated between the lion and eagle, and to have the head and paws of the lion, and the wings of the eagle.

Of all bearing among these winged creatures, the griffin is the most ancient. Peacham.

Aristeus, a poet of Proconesus, affirmed, that near the one-eyed nations griffins defended the mines of gold. Brown.

GRIG. n. f. [kricks, Bavarian, a little duck.]

1. It seems originally to have signified any thing below the natural size.

2. A small eel.

3. A merry creature. [Supposed from Greek; graculus festivus, Latin.]

Hard is her heart as flint or stone,

She laughs to see me pale;

And merry as a grig is grown,

And brist as bottle-ale. Swift.

TO GRILL. v. n. [grille, a grate, French.]

To broil on a grate or gridiron.

GRILLADE. n. f. [from grill.] Any thing broiled on the gridiron.

TO GRILLY. v. a. [from grill.] This word signifies, as it seems, to harass; to hurt: as we now say, to roast a man, for to tease him.

For while we wrangle here and jar,
We're grill'd all at Temple-har. Hudibras.

GRIM. adj. [grmma, Saxon.]

1. Having a countenance of terror; horrible; hideous; frightful.

The innocent prey in haste he does forsake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every lin b,
With change of fear to see the lion look to grim. Spenser.

Grim Saturn yet remains,

Bound in those gloomy caves with adamantine chains. Deighton.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face

Bears a command in't. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Their dear causes

Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm

Excite the mortified man. Shakspeare's Merchant.

What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,

Awak'd, should blow them into sevenfold rage? Alston.

Expert to turn the fury

Of battle, open when and where to close

The ridges of grim war. Milton's Par. Lost.

He that dares to die,

May laugh at the grim face of law, and scorn

The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant brow. Deighton.

Their swarthy huffs would darken all our plains,

Doubling the native horror of the war,

And making death more grim. Addison.

2. Ugly; ill-looking.

Strait stood up to him

Divine Ulysses; who with looks exceeding grave and grim,

This better check gave. Chapman.

Grim visag'd war had smother'd his wrinkl'd front. Shakspeare.

Venus was like her mother; for her father is but grim. Shakspeare.

GRIMACE. n. f. [French, from grim.]

1. A distortion of the countenance from habit, affectation, or insolence.

He had not spar'd to shew his piques,
Against th' baranger's politicks,
With smart remarks of leering faces,
And annotations of grimaces! Hud. brat.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whims, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders. South's Sermons.

The buffoon ape, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field. L'Estrange.
The French nation is addicted to grimace. Spectator.

2. Air of affectation.

Vice in a vizzard, to avoid grimace,
Allows all freedom, but to see the face. Granville.

GRIMALKIN. n. f. [gris, French, gray, and malin, or little Moll. Gray little woman.] The name of an old cat.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe; with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice Sure ruin. Philips.

GRIME. n. f. [from grim.] Dirt deeply insinuated; sullying blackness not easily cleansed.

Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing to clean kept; for why? She sweats: a man may go over shoes in the grime of it. Shakespeare.
Collow is the word by which they denote black grime of burnt coals or wood. Woodward.

To GRIME. v. a. [from the noun.] To dirt; to fully decay.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakespeare.

GRIMLY. adv. [from grim.]

1. Horribly; hideously; terribly.

We've landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,
And threaten present blusters. Shakespeare.
So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,
Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addison's Cato.

2. Sourly; sullenly.

The augurs
Say they know not; they cannot tell; look grimly,
And dare not speak their knowledge. Shaksp.

GRIMNESS. n. f. [from grim.] Horror;
frightfulness of visage.

To GRIN. v. n. [grinnen, Saxon; grinnen, Dutch, undoubtedly of the same origin with To grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French.]

1. To set the teeth together and with- draw the lips either in anger or in mirth.

Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!
Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st. Shakespeare.
What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away. Shakespeare.

It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning, and only showing their teeth. Stillingfleet.

A lion's hide he wears:
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin. Dryden.
They neither could defend, nor can pursue;
But grin'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view. Dryden.

Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth
To grinning laughter, and to frantick mirth. Prior.

Fools grin on fools, and Stoicklike support,
Without one sigh, the pleasures of a court. Young.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguish.

I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter bath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

GRIN. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and showing them.

He laughs at him: in 's face too.
—O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,
The sawning joy of courtiers and of dogs. Dryd.
The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin. Addison.

Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and arguments; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grimace. Watts on the Mind.

What lords are those saluting with a grin?
One is just out, and one is lately in. Young.

GRIN. n. f. [grȳn, grȳne, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.

Like a bride that hasteth to his grȳn?
Not knowing the perils. Chaucer.
The grin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him. Job.

To GRIND. v. a. preter. I ground; part.
pass. ground. [grindan, ge-grunden, ground, Saxon.]

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Matthew.
He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding. Shakespeare.

What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate even into living and rational meat? Bentley's Sermons.

2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.

Meeting with time, slack things, said I,
Thy suture is dull; whet it, for shame:
No marvel, sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;
But where one man would have me grind it
Twenty to one too sharp to find it. Herbert.
Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryden's Fables.

3. To rub one against another.

So up he let him rise; who with grim look,
And count'nance stern, upstanding, 'gan to grind
His grated teeth for great disdain. Spenser.

Harsh sounds, as of a saw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge. Bacon's Natural History.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. To harass; to oppress.

Some merchants and tradersmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty. Bacon's Advice to Soldiers.

Another way the Spaniards have taken to grind the Neapolitans, and yet to take off the odium from themselves. Addison.

5. In the following lines, I know not whether it be not corruptly used for grinding, cutting.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden thoutings and of grinding pains,
My throws come thicker; and my cries increase'd. Dryden.

To GRIND. v. n.

1. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.

Fetter'd they send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses. Milton's Allegro.

2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.

Shrinking sinews start,
And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws. Rowe.

GRINDER. n. f. [from grind.]

1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.

The instrument of grinding.
His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone. Sandys.

Now exhort

Thy hinds to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Philips.

3. [grind today.] The back teeth; the double teeth.

The teeth are in men of three kinds; sharp, as the foreteeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both. Bacon's Natural History.

He the raging lioness confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey. Sanctus.

The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molars, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better scraim, grind, and commix the aliments. Ray.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore heroceating animals, which do not ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbutnot.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.

One, who at the sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd. Dryden.

Both he brought;
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught. Dryden.

GRINDLESTONE. } n. f. [from grind and GRINDSTONE. } stone.] The stone on which edged instruments are sharpened.

Such a light and mettall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by the lead-men, for the dance,
That turn round like grindlestones. Ben Jonson.
Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the cog-iters, and to whet their natural faculties. Harmond on Fundamentals.

Smiths that make hedges brighten them, yet seldom file them; but grind them on a grindstone
'till bright. Mason.

GRINNER. n. f. [from grim.] He that grins.

The frightful grin
Be the winner. Addison's Spectator.

GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grim.] With a grinning laugh.

GRIP. n. f. A small ditch. Ainsworth.

To GRIPE. v. a. [gripan, Gothick; gripan, Saxon; gripen, Dutch; gripp, Scottish.]

1. To hold with the fingers closed; to grasp; to press with the fingers.

He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
Would he that hears makes fearful action
With winkl'd brows. Shaksp. King John.

2. To hold hard.

He seiz'd the shining bough with gripping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold. Dryden's Emili.

GRI

3. [gripper, French.] To catch eagerly; to seize.

You took occasion to be quickly wou'd,
To gripe the gen'ral sway into your hands.
Shakespeare's Henry iv.

4. To close; to clutch.

Unlucky Welford! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his hand the faster.
Pope.

5. To pitch; to press; to squeeze.

A wond'rous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the griped prey.
Spenser.

And first the dame came rushing through the wood;
And next the famili'd hounds that fought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood.
Dryden's Fables.

6. To give a pain in the bowels.

Thus full of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent.
Dryden.

7. To GRIBE. v. n.

1. To feel the colick, to have the belly-ache.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others.
Locke.

Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture, and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us.
Locke.

2. To pinch; to catch at money meanly.

It is mean revenue, by being scattered, in the worst of times growing upon him, when others that had great ones, by gripping, made them less, and grew stark beggars.
Fell.

GRIBE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.

Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws,
Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dy.
Spenser.

They put a barren scapere in my gripe
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the flairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made bawdy with hourly falsehood as with labour.
Shakespeare.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service.
Shakspeare's Henry v.
I felt; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. Squeeze; pressure.

Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the
breast;

'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe.
Dryden.

3. Oppression; crushing power.

I take my course
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the King my master.
Shakespeare's Henry viii.

4. Affliction; pinching distress.

Adam, at the news
Heart-struck with chilling gripes of sorrow flood,
That all his senses bound!
Milton's Par. Lost.
Canst thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,

Fram'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the bitter gripes of smarting poverty?
Orway.

5. [In the plural.] Bellyache; colick.

In the jaundice the choler is wanting; and the icterical have a great sourness and gripes with windiness.
Floyer.

GRIFPER. n. f. [from gripe.] Oppressor; usurer; extortioner.

Others pretend zeal, and yet are profess'd usurers, grifpers, monsters of men, and I repeat.
Burton on Melancholy.

GRIPINGLY. adv. [from gripping.] With pain in the guts.

Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts,
and work grippingly.
Bacon's Nat. History.

GRIPPLE. n. f. A greedy snatcher; a gripping miser.

GRISAUBER. n. f. Used by Milieu for ambergris.

Beasts of chase, or fowl of game,
In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd,
Grisauber steam'd.
Milton's Paradise Reg.

GRISE. n. f. [See GRACE, as it should be written.] A step, or scale of steps.

Let me speak like ourself; and lay a sentence,
Which, as a grise or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour.
Shakespeare's Othello.

GRISKIN. n. f. [griffin, roast meat, Irish.] The vertebrae of a hog broiled.

GRISLY. adj. [griful, Saxon.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible.

His grisly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round.
Spenser.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadstool grown there might I see.
Spenser.

My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death.
Shakespeare's Henry vi.

Back step'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grisly king;
Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accus'd him soon.
Milton.

For that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the footy flag of Achéron.
Milton.

The beauteous form of fight,
Is chang'd, and war appears a grisly fight.
Dryden's Fables.

In vision thou shalt see his grisly face,
The king of terrors raging in thy race.
Thus the grisly spectre spoke again.
Dryden.

Close by each other laid, they press'd the
ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grisly
wound.
Dryden.

So rushes on his foe the grisly bear.
Addison.

GRIST. n. f. [grist, Saxon.]

1. Corn to be ground.

Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Lest miller lack war.
Tusser's Husbandry.
A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at scholar's hall.
Milner of Tromp.

2. Supply; provision.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist.
Swift.

3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.

The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist in the mill.
Ayliffe's Paragon.

GRISTLE. n. f. [gristle, Saxon.]

A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creature, that have shells very hard,
as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tertoise, have bones within them, but only little gristles.
Bacon's Natural History.

Lest the asperity or hardness of cartilages should hurt the oesophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a slimy substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore the annular

GRI

gristles of the windpipe are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet. Ray on the Creation.

GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes.
Harvey.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures.
Nore.

Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like womens fans.
Ray.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe.
Grew.

Each pipe distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings.
Blackmore.

GRIT. n. f. [grȳta, grȳot, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.

2. Oats husked, or coarsely ground.

3. Sand; rough hard particles.

Silexian hole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as soap.
Grew.

The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughed root Piece the obstructing grit and resistive marle.
Philips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no determinate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or disunited by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass.

One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt water, into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards disunited by water. This is the putris petrolanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plasters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysolite of the ancients, which they used in soldering gold, long supposed a lost so-phid. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax. The ferruginous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy.
Hill on Fossils.

GRITTINESS. n. f. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.

In fuller's-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness.
Mortimer.

GRITTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof.
Newton.

GRIZELIN. n. f. [more properly gridelin.
See GRIDELIN.]

The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red,
of all others, is surest to ripen in our climate.
Temple.

GRIZZLE. n. f. [from gris, gray; grisaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face?
Shakespeare.

GRIZZLED. adj. [from grizzle.] Interspersed with gay.

To the boy Cæsar, send this grizzled head.

Shakspeare.

His beard was grizzled: no.

—It was as I have seen it in his life. Shakspeare.

His hair just grizzled,

As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide

In plenteous growth their asses ears to hide. Dryden.

GRIZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, Fr.]

Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turned to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled and turn white; and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Baron.

To GROAN. v. n. [griānan, Saxon; grienen, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir

Of these fair edifices, for my wars,

Have I heard groan and drop. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.

Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out. Job.

Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit. Wisdom.

So shall the world go on,

To good malignant, to bad men benign,

Under her own weight groaning. Milton.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.

On the blazing pile his parent lay,

Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope.

GROAN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty, from pain, faintness, or weariness.

Alas, poor country,

Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,

Are made, not mark'd! Shakspeare's Macbeth.

I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;

And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive. Dryden.

Hence aching hofoms wear a visage gay,

And list'd groans frequent the ball and play. Young.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,

Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. King Lear.

GROANFUL. adj. [groan and full.] Sad; agonizing. Not used.

Adown he left it with so puissant wreat,

That back again it did aloft rebound,

—And gave against his mother earth a groanful sound. Spenser.

GROAT. n. f. [groot, Dut. grosso, Ital.]

1. A piece valued at four pence.

2. A proverbial name for a small sum.

My mother was wont

To call them woolen vassals, things created

To buy and sell with groats. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.

I dare lay a groat,

A tertian ague is at least your lot. Dryden's Fables.

Imagine a person of quality to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune. Swift.

3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulls taken off. Ainsworth.

GROCER. n. f. [This should be written groffer, from grofs, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grossus, a fig, which their present state seems to favour.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar, and plums and spices for gain. Watts's Logic.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove.

Garth.

GROCERY. n. f. [from grocer.] Grocers ware, such as tea, sugar, raisins, spice.

His troops being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon.

GROGERAM. } n. f. [gros, grain, Fr.

GROGRAM. } grossogranus, low Latin.

GROGRAN. } Ainsworth.] Stuff woven with a large woof and a rough pile.

Certes they're neatly cloth'd: I of this mind am,

Your only wearing is your grogram. Donne.

Natolia adorns great store of chamelots and grograms. Saunders.

Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse feature of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grogram, or the like. Brown.

The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in grogram than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade. Addison.

Plain goody would no longer down;

'Twas madam in her grogram gown. Swift.

GROIN. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.]

The part next the thigh.

Antiplexus, a sonne of Priam, threw

His lance at Ajax through the preface, which went by him, and flew,

On Leucus, wife Ulysses' friend: His groin it smote. Chapman.

The fatal dart arrives,

And through the border of his buckler drives;

Pais'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly

wound

Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground. Dryden.

GROMWELL. n. f. [litb-spermum, Lat.]

Gromill or graymill. A plant. Miller.

GROOM. n. f. [groom, Dutch.]

1. A boy; a waiter; a servant.

Then called she a groom, that forth him led

Into a goodly lodge. Spenser.

From Egypt's kings ambassadors they come;

Them many a squire attends, and many a groom. Fairfax.

Think then, my soul! that death is but a groom

Which brings a taper to the outward room. Donne.

In the time of Edward vj. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father had made groom of his chamber, for turning of certain of David's psalms into verse. Peacham.

Would'st thou be touch'd

By the presuming hands of leucy grooms? Dryden.

Amid' the fold herages, nor the sheep

Their shepherds, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryden.

2. A young man.

I presume sorto intreat this groom,

And silly maid, from danger to redeem. Fairfax.

3. A man newly married.

By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are dies'd; Dryden.

All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast.

Dryden.

GROOVE. n. f. [from grave.]

1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.

He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.

The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other;

and in those holes are threads grooved inwards,

which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Newton's Mech. Exerc.

To GROOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut hollow.

Of the box every joint was well grooved. Swift.

To GROPE. v. n. [grapan, Saxon.]

To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-gown scarf about me, in the dark

Grop'd, I to find out them. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes. Izaak.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;

And grope at noon, as if involv'd with night. Sandys.

A boy was groping for eels, and laid his hand upon a snake. L'Estrange.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they thould in the dark grope after knowledge; as

St. Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He heard us in our course,

And with his outstretch'd arms around him grop'd. Addison.

O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy ray,

I grope and guess no more, but see my way. Arbutnot.

To GROPE. v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see.

How vigilant to grope mens thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain. Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to grope them out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evidenced by light. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant

The bottom of the pan to grope. Swift.

GROPER. n. f. [from grope.] One that searches in the dark.

GROSS. adj. [gross, French; grosso, Ital. crassus, Latin.]

air,

Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shakspeare.

There are two gross volumes concerning the power of popes. Baker.

2. Shameful; unseemly; enormous.

He ripely considered how gross a thing it were for men of his quality, wife and grave men, to live with such a multitude, and to be tenants at will under them. Hecker.

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, and in sacraments, the church of Rome hath very foul and gross corruptions. Hecker.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of fundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, no, not gross iniquity to be

sin. Hecker.

There is a vain and imprudent use of their estates, which, though it does not destroy like gross sin, yet disorders the heart, and supports it in sensuality and dulness. Law.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.

To all sense 'tis gross

You love my son: invention is atham'd,

Against the proclamation of thy passion,

To say thou do'st not. Shakspeare.

Examples gross as earth exhaust me. Shakspeare.

Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd

Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love

Vice for itself. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself,

above all, in its Author, that, without the gross sensuality, we cannot but admire it? Spinoza.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our want only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficent. Smalridge.

But she darts never boast the present hour,

So gross the cheat, it is beyond her pow'r. Young.

4. Inelegant; disproportionate in bulk.

The sun's oppressive ray the roseate bloom

Of beauty blinding, gives the gloomy hue,

And features gross. Thomson's Summer.

5. Dense; not refined; not attenuated;

not pure.

It is manifest, that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the grosser, thing, shew greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium, and the object in the finer Bacon's Natural History.

Of elements,

The grosser feeds the purer; earth the sea,
Earth and the sea feed air. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Light fumes are merry, grosser fumes are sad;
Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryden.

Or suck the mists in grosser air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

tionate dimensions, avoiding the extremes of gross and meager. Fell.

GROSS, n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The main body; the main force.

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste
The deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or, it with caution leisurely we pass,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

Several casuists are of opinion, that, in a battle, you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person. Addison's Freeholder.

The gross of the people can have no other prospect in changes and revolutions than of public blessings. Addison.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.

Certain general inducements are used to make saleable your cause in gross. Hooker.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal. Abbott.

There is confession, that is, the acknowledging our sins to God; and this may be either general or particular: The general is, when we only confess in gross that we are sinful; the particular, when we mention the several sorts and acts of our sins. Duty of Man.

Remember, son,

You are a general: other wars require you;
For see the Saxon gross begins to move. Dryden.

Notwithstanding the decay and loss of sundry trades and manufactures, yet in the gross, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also lead and tin, than we did twenty years past. Child on Trade.

3. Not individual, but a body together.

He hath ribbons of all the colours! th' rainbow; they come to him by the gross. Shaksp.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. Shaksp.

You see the united design of many persons to make up one figure: after they have separated themselves in many petty divisions, they rejoin one by one into a gross. Dryden.

4. The chief part; the main mass.

Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things. Bacon.

The articulate sounds are more confused,
though the gross of the sound be greater. Bacon.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [gross, French.]

It is made up only of that simple idea of an unit repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Luck.

GROSSLY, adv. [from gross.]

1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulverized.

2. Without subtilty; without art; with- out delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Heater.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose;
Working to grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shaksp.

And thine eyes

See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour,
That in their kind they speak it. Shaksp.

What! are we cuckolded ere we have desired it?
—Speak not to grossly. Merchant of Venice.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If I speak of light and rays as endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people would be apt to frame. Newton's Opticks.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious inquisitive heads. Swift.

GROSSNESS, n. f. [from gross.]

1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness; spissitude; density; greatness of parts.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whole grossness little characters sum up. Shaksp.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shaksp.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon.

Then all this earthy grossness quit;
Att'nd with stars we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death. Milton.

This being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opticks.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, was known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.

Wife men, that be over-fat and Aethy, go to sujourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Afshaw.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltness of my mind drove the grossness of the suppers into a received belief that they were fairies. Shaksp.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned
Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clarissa.

GROT, n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Ital.]

A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,
Certain to meet that work of evils, thought
Prior.

Awful see the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTESQUE, adj. [grotesque, French;
grottesco, Italian.] Distorted of figure;
unnatural; wildly formed.

The champagne head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thickest overgrown, grotesque and wild, Accents deny'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden.

An hideous figure of their fies they drew,
Nurseries, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,
And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grot-sec roots, and stucco floors. Pope.

GROTTO, n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grotto's run,
The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun.
Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward.

GROVE, n. f. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Biam, and anon methought
The wood began to move:

Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say, a moving grove. Shaksp.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;
Thrice happy isles! Milton.

She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove.
Blackmore.

Ranish'd from courts and love,
Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove.
Granville.

Can fierce passions vex his bread,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Thomson's Spring.

To GROVEL, v. n. [grusile, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground fell.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-head passage wrought,
And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground

He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound. Spenser.

What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem, Inchas'd with all the honours of the world!

If to, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same. Shaksp.

Oke malt and beech, and cornell fruit they eat,
Groveling like swine on earth, in sowth'tory.

Now they lie
Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milton.

Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milton.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves
'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim what'er he can express;
His groveling sense will shew my passion less. Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addison's Spectator.

GROUND, n. f. [grund, Saxon; grundt, Danish.]

1. The earth, considered as superficially extended, and therefore related to tillage, travel, habitation, or almost any action.

The main mass of terrene matter is never called the ground. We never distinguish the terraqueous globe into ground and water, but into earth, or land, and water;

again, we never lay under earth, but under ground.

Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea.
Isaiah.

Man to till the ground
None was, and from the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground. Milton.

- From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gilding meteorous. Milton.
- A black bituminous gurge
Boils up from under ground. Milton.
- And yet so nimbly he would bound,
As if he scorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.
2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.
I have made man and beast upon the ground. Jeremiah.
- There was a dew upon all the ground. Judges.
- They summ'd their wings, and soaring th' air sublime; Milton.
- With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.
- Too late young Turnus the delusion found;
Far on the sea, still making from the ground. Dryden's Æneid.
3. Land; country.
The water breaks its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.
4. Region; territory.
On heavenly ground they stood, and from the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss. Milton.
- With these came they, who from the bordering flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names Of Baalim and Ashtaroth. Milton's Parad. Lost.
5. Estate; possession.
Uncasy still within these narrow bounds,
Thy next design is on thy neighbour's grounds:
His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own. Dry.
6. Land occupied.
The sea o'erflow'd my ground,
And my best Flanders mare was drown'd. Mil.
7. The floor or level of the place.
Wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? 2 Samuel.
- Dagon was fallen on his face to the ground. 1 Samuel.
- A multitude sit on the ground. Matthew.
- Some part of the month of June, the water of this lake defends under ground, through many great holes at the bottom. Brown.
8. Dregs; lees; feces; that which settles at the bottom of liquors.
Set by them cyder, verjuice, sour drink, or grounds. Mortimer.
- Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping gangrenes, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal. Sharp's Surgery.
9. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterward painted.
We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with darklone colours. Hakerwill.
- When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden.
10. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.
O'er his head
A well-wrought heaven of silk and gold was spread,
Azure the ground, the sun in gold shone bright. Corwall.
- Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.
- Then, wrought into the soul, let virtues shine,
The ground eternal, as the work divine. Young.
11. The plain song; the tune on which decants are raised.

- Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy decant. Shakespeare's Richard III.
12. First hint; first traces of an invention;
that which gives occasion to the rest.
Though jealousy of state th' invention found,
Yet love refin'd upon the former ground;
That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly,
Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.
13. The first principles of knowledge.
The concords will easily be known, if the fore-grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Prof. to Acad.
- Here statesmen, or of them they which can read,
May of their occupation find the grounds. Dante.
- The grounds are already laid whereby that is unquestionably refuted; for having granted that God gives sufficient grace, yet when he co-operates most effectually, he doth it not irresistibly. Hammond.
- After evening repasts, 'till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton on Education.
14. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle.
He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.
- Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness, and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sid.
- The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker.
- In the solution of the Sabbatizer's objection, my method shall be, to examine, in the first place, the main grounds and principles upon which he builds. White.
- Thou could'st not have discern'd Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Milton.
- Not did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon.
- Sound judgment is the ground of writing well. Roscommon.
- Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryden.
- It is not easy to imagine how any such tradition could arise so early, and spread so universally, if there were not a real ground for it. Wilkins.
- If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.
- Thus it appears, that suits at law are not sinful in themselves, but may lawfully be used, if there is no unlawfulness in the ground and way of management. Kettwell.
- Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.
- The miraculous increase of the professors of christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.
15. The field or place of action.
Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose;
And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring,
Or batten'd at the least upon this ground. Dan.
16. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.
At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.
- Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their
ground,
While ours with easy victory were crown'd. Dryden.
- He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Benefic. Dryden.

17. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.
Evening mist,
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels, Homeward returning. Milton's Par. Lost.
- Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison's Spect.
- Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment. Addison.
18. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.
Hast thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung. Shakespeare.
- If they get ground and vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of steel,
To make them stronger. Shaksp. Henry IV.
- He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury.
- Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the other. Atterbury.
19. State of progress or recession.
I have known too many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.
- The quirell is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs apace, and wears herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden's Desiresing.
20. The soil to set a thing off.
Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no soil to set it off. Shaksp.
- To GROUND. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To fix on the ground.
2. To found, as upon cause, reason, or principle.
Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker.
- The church of England, walking in the good and old way of the orthodoxal primitive fathers, groundeth the religious observation of the Lord's-day, and of other christian holidays, upon the natural equity, and not upon the letter of the fourth commandment. White.
- It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyle.
- If your own actions on your will you ground,
Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dry.
- Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.
3. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge.
Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph.
- GROUND. The pret. and part. pass. of grind.
How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground
And polish'd, looks a diamond. Hudibras.
- GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near the ground.
- GRO'UND-ASH. n. f. A saplin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.
A lance of tough ground-ash the Trojan threw,
Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dry.
- Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call ground-ash.

GRO'UND-BAIT. n. f. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.

Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your ground-bait, and to fish. Wal.

GRO'UND-FLOOR. n. f. [from ground and floor.] The lower part of a house.

GRO'UND-IVY. n. f. [bedera terrestris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tuinhoof.

Alehoof or ground-ivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GRO'UND-OAK. n. f. [from ground and oak.]

If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the cooper's trade for the making of hoops, either of hael or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a ground-oak, would outlast six of the best ash.

GRO'UND-PINE. n. f. [chamapitys, Latin.] A plant.

The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name ground-pine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch banks by road sides. Hill.

GRO'UND-PLATE. n. f. [In architecture.]

The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney-way, and the binding joist. Harris.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the ground plates, breast turners, and beams. Mortimer.

GRO'UND-PILOT. n. f.

1. The ground on which any building is placed.

Wretched Gynecia, where can'st thou find any small ground-pile for hope to dwell upon? Sidney.

A ground-pile square five hives of bees contains; Emblems of industry and virtuous gains. Harte.

2. The ichnography of a building

GRO'UND-RENT. n. f. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground.

A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground-rent of five pounds. Arbutnot on Coins.

The site was neither granted him, nor giv'n; 'Twas nature's, and the ground-rent due to Heaven. Harte.

GRO'UND-ROOM. n. f. A room on the level with the ground.

I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him. Tatler.

GRO'UNDELY. adv. [from grounded.] Upon firm principles.

He hath given the first hint of speaking ground-ely, and to the purpose, upon this subject. Glanv.

GRO'UNDLESS. adj. [from ground.] Void of reason; wanting ground.

But when vain doubt and groundless fear Do that dear foolish bosom tear. Prior.

We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject her vain and fabulous accounts of them. Atterbury.

The party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the present establishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may show how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them, of being averse to our national worship. Frechehold.

GRO'UNDLESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Without reason; without cause; without just reason.

Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of vitriol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors. Boyle on Colours.

GRO'UNDLESSNESS. n. f. [from groundless.] Want of just reason.

He dares not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falshood and groundlessness of his calumny. Tillotson.

GRO'UNDLING. n. f. [from ground.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water; hence one of the low vulgar.

It offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious perriwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rage, to split the ears of the groundling. Hammer.

GRO'UNDLY. adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially.

Not in use. A man, groundly learned already, may take much profit himself, in using by epitome to draw other men's works, for his own memory sake, into shorter toom. Ascham.

GRO'UNDESEL. n. f. [grund and pule, the basis, Saxon, perhaps from fella, Latin.] The timber or raised pavement next the ground.

The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the groundsel, are grooved square; but the rabbet on the groundsel is levelled downwards, that rain or snow may the freelier fall off. Moxon.

GRO'UNDESEL. n. f. [senecio, Latin.] A plant.

GRO'UNDWORK. n. f. [from ground and work.]

1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional.

A way there is in heav'n's expanded plain, Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below, And mortals by the name of milky know; The groundwork is of Raus. Dryden's Fables.

2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals.

The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience. Milton.

3. First principle; original reason.

The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity. Somerset.

The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.

GROUPE. n. f. [groupe, French; gropo, Italian.] A crowd; a cluster; a huddle; a number thronged together.

In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zetus, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers binding Dirce to the horns of a mad bull. Addison.

You should try your graving tools On this odious group of fools. Swift.

TO GROUPE. v. a. [grouper, French.] To put into a crowd; to huddle together.

The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects, preserving still the justice and conformity of style and colouring. Prior.

GROUSE. n. f. A kind of fowl; a heath-cock.

The 'squires in scorn will fly the house For better game, and look for grouse. Swift.

GROUT. n. f. [grut, Saxon. In Scotland they call it grouts.]

1. Coarse meal; pollard.

King Hardicnut, 'midst Danes and Saxons flout, Carous'd in nut-brown ale, and din'd on grout; Which dith its pristine honour still retains, And when each prince is crown'd in splendour reigns. King.

2. That which purges off.

Sweet honey some condense, some purge the grout; The rest, in cells apart, the liquid nectar thow. Dryden.

3. A kind of wild apple. [agriomelum, Latin.]

TO GROW. v. n. pret. grew; part. pass. grown. [giupan, Sax. groyen, Dut.]

1. To vegetate; to have vegetable motion; to increase by vegetation.

It is not the growing of fruit that manifesteth man; but it is thy word which preserveth them. Wisdome.

He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man. Psalms.

2. To be produced by vegetation.

In this country growth abundance of that wood, which since is brought into Europe to dye red colours. Abbot.

A bag, that groweth in the fields, at the first is hard like a tennis-ball, and white; and after growth of a mushroom-colour, and full of light dust. Bacon's Natural History.

But say, where grows the tree? from hence how far? Milton.

In colder regions men compose Poison with art; but here it grows. Waller.

Those tow'ns of oak o'er fertile plains might go, And visit mountains where they once did grow. Waller.

3. To shoot in any particular form.

Children, like tender oaks, take the bow; And as they first are fashion'd, always grow. Dryden's Juvenal.

4. To increase in stature.

I long with all my heart to see the prince; I hope he is much grown since last I saw him. Shakespeare's Richard III.

The poor man had nothing, save one little ewe-lamb, which he had bought and rear'd up; and it grew up together with him and with his children. 2 Samuel.

5. To come to manhood from infancy; commonly followed by up.

Now the prince grew up fast to be a man, and is of a sweet and excellent disposition. Bacon's Advice to Fillets.

The main thing to be considered, in every action of a child, is how it will become him when he is bigger, and whither it will lead him when he is grown up. Locke.

We are brought into the world children, ignorant and impotent; and we grow up in vanity and folly. Walter.

6. To issue, as plants from a soil, or as branches from the main trunk.

They will seem not stuck into him, but growing out of him. Dryden's An. Dedication.

7. To increase in bulk; to become greater, or more numerous.

Bones, after full growth, continue at a stay: as for nails they grow continually. Bacon.

Then their numbers swell, And grow upon us. Drake.

Divisions grow upon us, by neglect of practical duties: as every age degenerated from primitive piety, they advanced in nice enquiries.

Dray of Piety.

8. To improve; to make progress.

Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. 2 Peter.

He then dispensed his best of legacies, his blessings; most passionately exhorting the young growing hopes of the family. Fell.

For to misguiding her true knight to be. Spenser.
He that, by the revenging hand, at once receive the just guerdon of all his former villainies.
Knell's.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with the' abhorred sheers,
And fits the thin-spun life. Milton.

TO GUESS. v. a. [ghiffen, Dutch.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgment.

Incapable and shallow innocents!
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.
Shakespeare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.
—Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should be not very often guess rightly of things to come,
where God pleaseth not to give impediment?
Raleigh.

There issue swarming hands
Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and drets,
To be Taxallan enemies I guess. Dryden.
The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government. Swift.

Nor can imagination guess,
How that ungrateful charming maid
My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly, or upon some just reason.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God.
Stillington.

TO GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by acci- dent; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judg- ment.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart. Locke.

GUESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces.
Shakespeare.

His guess was usually as near to prophecy as any man's. Fell.

A poet must confess
His art's like physick, but a happy guess. Dryd.
It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,
Let us for once a child of truth confess. Prior.
No man is blest by accident, or guess,
True wisdom is the price of happiness. Young.

GUESSER. n. f. [from guess.] Conjectur- er; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last hit will not be more violent than advantageous. Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a crotchety,
To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,
To give thee lawn sleeves, a mitre and rochet, Whom wouldst thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUESSINGLY. adv. [from guessing.] Con- jecturally; uncertainly. Not in use.

I have a letter guessingly set down. Shakespeare.

GUEST. n. f. [gæst, gæst, Saxon; gæst, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house or at the table of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner. Luke.
Methinks a father
Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest
That best becomes the table. Shakespeare.

Tell my royal guest
I add to his commands my own request. Dryden.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.

O defaults, defaults! how fit a guest am I for you, since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting?
Sidney.

Those happiest smiles
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence
As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shakespeare.

GUEST-RITE. n. f. [from guest and rite.]

Offices due to a guest.
Ulysses so dear
A gift esteem'd it, that he would not bear
In his black steets that guest-rite to the war.
Chapman.

GUEST-CHAMBER. n. f. [guest and cham- ber.] Chamber of entertainment.

Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat
the passover with my disciples? Mark.

TO GUGGLE. v. n. [gorgolaire, Italian.]

To found as water running with inter-missions out of a narrow-mouthed vessel.

GUIDAGE. n. f. [from guide.] The re- ward given to a guide.

GUIDANCE. n. f. [from guide.] Direc- tion; government.

They charge me with neglecting the guidance of wiser men. Spenser.

As to those who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead, would persuade them.

Particular application must be left to christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking. Rogers.

This to the young—but thy experienc'd age
Wants not the guidance of a baron's sage. Scwell.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party. Swift.

TO GUIDE. v. a. [guider, French.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth. John.

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours' coffers. Decay of Piety.

Whoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

South.

2. To influence.

Upon these, or such like secular maxims,
when nothing but the interest of this world guides men, they many times conclude that the slightest wrongs are not to be put up. Kettwell.

3. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me.
Psalms.

4. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house. Decay of Piety.

GUIDE. n. f. [guide, Fr. from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wisdom.
Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance
So far to make us with for ignorance?
And rather in the dark to grope our way,
Than, led by a false guide, to err by day?
Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young, his father dy'd,
And left him to an happy guide. Waller.

They have all the same pastoral guides appointed, authorised, sanctified, and set apart by the appointment of God by the direction of the spirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the same way of eternal salvation. Pearson.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument:
nor is there any such knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,
But we have sure experience for our guide.
Dryden's Fables.

GUIDELSS. adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governor or su- perintendent.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guidelss kingdom peace bequeath'd.
Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whence every puff bears empty shades away,
Which guidelss in those dark dominions stray.
Dryden.

GUIDER. n. f. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide. Obsolete.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shakespeare.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an impost-hume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so slabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his surgeon, and providence for the guider of his hand. South.

GUIDON. n. f. [French.] A standard- bearer; a standard. Obsolete.

GUILD. n. f. [gildscip, Saxon, a fel- lowship, a corporation.] A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word gild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their com- mon charge by mutual contribution. Cowell.

Towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the guild hall affords.
Shakespeare's Richard III.
 In woolen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

As when the long-eared milky mothers wait
 At some sick miser's triple bolted gate,
 For their defrauded absent souls they make
 A moan so loud, that all the guild awake. Pope.
GUILE. n. f. [guille, gulle, old French,
 the same with wile.] Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtilty.

With sawning words he courted her awhile,
 And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,
 Her constant heart did court with divers guile;
 But words and looks, and signs she did abhor. Spenser.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
 Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
 Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
 When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shaks.
 We may, with more successful hope, resolve
 To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milton.
 Nor thou his malice and false guile condemn:
 Subtle he needs must be who could seduce Angels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GUILEFUL. adj. [guile and full.]

1. Wily; insidious; mischievously artful.
 The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skilful against guile. Hooker.

Without expence at all,
 By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd.
Shakespeare's Henry vi.

He saw his guileful act
 By eve, though all unweeting, seconded Upon her husband. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 The guileful phantom now forsook the throwd,
 And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud. Dryden's Æn.

2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.
 I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
 Where the dead corps of Bassianus lay. Shaks.
GUILEFULLY. adv. [from guileful.] Insidiously; treacherously.

To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd. Milt.
GUILEFULNESS. n. f. [from guileful.]
 Secret treachery; tricking cunning.
GUILELESS. adj. [from guile.] Free from deceit; void of insidiousness;
 simply honest.

GUI'LER. n. f. [from guile. See Beguile.] One that betrays into danger
 by insidious practices.

But he was wary wife in all his way,
 And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
 He suffered lust his safety to betray;
 So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey. Spenser.

GUILT. n. f. [gilt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]

1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.

It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Shakspeare's Henry vii.
 When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. A crime; an offence.

Clofe pent up guilts
 Rive your concealing continents, and ask
 These dreadful summoners grace. Shakspeare.

GUILTY. adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.

Bloody and guilty; guiltily awake,
 And in a bloody battle end thy days:
 Think on lord Hastings, and despair, and die.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

GUILTINESS. n. f. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.

He thought his sight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness.
Sidney.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
 O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
 And die in terror of thy guiltiness. Shakspeare.
 I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shaks.

GUILTLESS. adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.

I am in this commanded to deliver
 The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
 I will not reason what is meant hereby,
 Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shaks.

Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
 All guiltless, meet reproach. Shakspeare's Othello.
 Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity,
 and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Numbers.
 Thou, who do'st all thou wishest at thy will,
 And never wilted aught but what is right,
 Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
 Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.

Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
 Nor knew nor wish'd he that those vows he made
 On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.
 The teeming earth yet guiltless of the plough,
 And unprovok'd did fruitful stores allow. Dryd.
 Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,

When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.

GUILTLESSLY. adv. [from guiltless.]
 Without guilt; innocently.

GUILTLESSNESS. n. f. [from guiltless.]
 Innocence; freedom from crime.

A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney.

I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles.

GUILTY. adj. [giltig, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]

1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.

Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?

—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since. Shakspeare.

Mark'd you not
 How that the guilty kindred of the queen
 Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence death? Shakspeare.

We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear. Genesis.

With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
 Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
 Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
 Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryd.
 Farewel the stones
 And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans. Dryden.

There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson.

2. Wicked; corrupt.

All the tumult of a guilty world,
 Tost by ungenerous passion, sinks away. Thomson.

GUINEA. n. f. [from Guinea, a country in Africa abounding with gold.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.

By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined. Locke.

Ladies, whose love is constant as the wind:
 Cits, who prefer a guinea to mankind. Young.
GUINEADROPPER. n. f. [guinea and drop.] One who cheats by dropping guineas.

Who now the guineadropper's bait regards,
 Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards.
Gay.

GU'NEAWEN. n. f. A fowl, supposed to be of Guinea.

GU'NEAPEPPER. n. f. [capsicum, Latin.]
 A plant. Miller.

GU'NEAPIG. n. f. A small animal with a pig's snout, brought, I believe, from Africa.

GUISE. n. f. [The same with wife, guise, French; pira, Saxon, the p or w being changed, as is common, into g.]

1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.

His own fix, and master of his guise,
 Did often tremble at his horrid view. Spenser.

Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,

T' enchant the valiant and beguile the wife.
Fairfax.

Lo you! here she comes: this is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

They stand a horrid front
 Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms in guise
 Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield, Awaiting what command their mighty chief
 Had to impose. Milton's Paradise Lost.

By their guise
 Just men they seem, and all their study bent
 To worship God a-right. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Back, shepherds, back:
 Here be without duck or nod,
 Other trippings to be trod,
 Of lighter toes and such court guise
 As mercury did first devise. Milton.

Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. Mare.

2. Practice; custom; property.

I have drunk wine past my usual guise;
 Strong wine commands the fool, and moves the wife. Chapman.

This would not be slept;
 Old guise must be kept. Ben Jonson.

The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
 To slight the poor, or aught humane despise. Pope.

3. External appearance; dress.

When I was very young, nothing was so much talked of as rickets among children, and consumptions among young people: after these the spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, which was the general complaint, and both were thought to appear in many various guises. Temple.

The Hugonots were engaged in a civil war, by the specious pretences of some, who, under the guise of religion, sacrificed so many thousands to their own ambition. Swift.

GUITA'. n. f. [ghitarra, Italian; guitarre,
 Fr.] A stringed instrument of musick.

Sallads and eggs, and lighter fare,
 Tune the Italian spark's guitar. Prior.

GULCH. } n. f. [from gulo, Latin.] A GU'LCHEIN. } little glutton. Skinner.

GULES. adj. [perhaps from gouls, the throat.] Red; a barbarous term of heraldry.

Follow thy drum;
 With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;
 Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
 Then what should war be? Shakspeare.

He whose sable arms,
 Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
 When he laid couched in the ominous horse,
 Hath now his dread and black complexion
 Smear'd

GUL

GUN

With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now he is total gulf. Shakspere.

GULF. n. f. [golfo, Italian.]

1. A bay; an opening into land.

The Venetian admiral withdrew himself farther off from the island Cursu, into the gulf of the Adriatick. Knales.

2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.

Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulph of deep Avernus' hole. Spenser.

I know thou'dst rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulph,
Than flatter him in a bower. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
This is the gulf through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description. Addison on Italy.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abysses and unfathomable gulfs? Beaumont.

3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.

England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shakspere.

4. Any thing insatiable, as the mouth or stomach.

Scull of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches mummy; maw and gulf
Of the ravening salt sea thrush;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark. Shakspere.

GULFY. adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; vorticosus.

Rivers arise; whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Ouse, or gulfy Dun. Milton.
At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,
All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,
And scap'd the perils of the gulfy main. Pope.
High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian isle Fronts the deep roar of disemboguing Nile. Pope.

TO GULL. v. a. [guiller, to cheat, old French.] To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.

If I do not gull him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shakspere.
Yet love these forc'd riles did remove, and move
Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.

He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too too politic. Hudibras.
They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick. L'Estrange.

The Roman people were grossly gull'd twice or thrice over, and as often enslaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden.

By their designing leaders taught,
The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.
For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be out-riden, though out-run;
By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd;
Of him disposing in his own abode,
He tooth'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.

GULL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. [mergus.] A sea bird.

2. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.

I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it. Shakspere's Much Ado.
Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not, tis an apparent cheat and gull. Gov. of Tongue.

3. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.

Being fed by us you us'd us so,
As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo bird,
Useth the sparrow. Shakspere's Henry IV.
Why gave you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,

And made the most notorious geck and gull
That e'er invention plaid on. Shakspere.

That paltry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you. Hudibras.

GULLCATCHER. n. f. [gull and catch.]

A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches filly people.

Here comes my noble gullcatcher. Shakspere.

GULLER. n. f. [from gull.] A cheat;
an impostor.

GULLERY. n. f. [from gull.] Cheat;
imposture. Amfworth.

GULLET. n. f. [goulet, Fr. gula, Lat.]

1. The throat; the passage through which the food passes; the meat-pipe;
the oesophagus.

It might be his doom,
One day to sing
With gullet in string. Dryden.

Many have the gullet or feeding channel which have no lungs or windpipes; as fishes which have gills, whereby the heart is refrigerated; for such thereof as have lungs and respiration are not without whizzon, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. A small stream or lake. Not in use.

Nature has various tender muscles plac'd,
By which the artful gullet is embrac'd. Blackmore.
The liquor in the stomach is a compound of that which is separated from its inward coat, the spittle which is swallowed, and the liquor which diffils from the gullet. Arbutnot.

The Buxine sea and the Mediterranean, small gullets, if compared with the ocean. Heylin.

TO GULLY. v. n. [corrupted from gur-gle.] To run with noise.

GULLYHOLE. n. f. [from gully and hole.]
The hole where the gutters empty themselves in the subterraneous sewer.

GULO'SITY. n. f. [gulosus, Lat.] Greedi-ness; gluttony; voracity.

They are very temperate, seldom offending in ebriety, not erring in gulosity, or superfluity of meats. Brown.

TO GULP. v. a. [golpen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.

He loosens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the morfel was gone wipes his mouth. L'Estrange.

I see the double flaggon charge their band;
See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain. Gay.

GULP. n. f. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and sorrow. More.

As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair. Dryden's Fables.

GUM. n. f. [gummi, Latin.]

1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstruums; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spirituous dissolvent. Quincy.

One whole eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakspere's Othello.

He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gum,
Which from remotest regions hither come. Waller.

Her maiden train,
Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire. Dryden's Fables.

2. [xoma, Saxon; gumm, Dutch.] The fleshy covering that invests and contains the teeth.

The babe that milks me,
I'd pluck my nipple from his boneless gums. Shakspere's Macbeth.

Sh' untwists a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes. Swift.

TO GUM. v. a. [from the noun.] To close with gum; to smear with gum.

The eyelids are apt to be gummed together with a viscous humour. Wifeman's Surgery.

GUMMINESS. n. f. [from gummy.] The state of being gummy; accumulation of gum.

The tendons are involved with a great gumminess and collection of matter. Wifeman.

GUMMOSITY. n. f. [from gummosus.]
The nature of gum; gumminess.

Sugar and honey make windy liquors, and the elastic fermenting particles are detained by their innate gummosity. Floyer.

GUMMOUS. adj. [from gum.] Of the nature of gum.

Observations concerning English amber, and relations about the amber of Prussia, prove that amber is not a gummous or resinous substance drawn out of trees by the sun's heat, but a natural fossil. Woodward's Natural History.

GUMMY. adj. [from gum.]

1. Consisting of gum; of the nature of gum.

From the utmost end of the head branches
there issueth out a gummy juice, which hangerh downward like a cord. Raleigh.

Nor all the gummy stores Arabia yields. Dryden's Virgil.

How each arising slder now appears,
And o'er the Po diffils her gummy tears. Dryden.

2. Productive of gum.

The clouds
Tine the slant light'ning; whose thwart flame
driv'n down,
Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton.

3. Overgrown with gum.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise;
Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate. Dryden.

GUN. n. f. [Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when guns came into use we had no commerce with Iceland. May not gun come by gradual corruption from canne, ganne, gunne? Canne is the original of cannon.] The general name for firearms; the instrument from which shot is discharged by fire.

These dread curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil
And turn upon thyself. Shakspere's Henry VI.

The emperor, smiling, said that never emperor was yet slain with a gun. Knales' History.

The bullet flying, makes the gun recoil. Cleaveland.

In vain the dart or glittering sword we shun, Condemn'd to perish by the slaughter'ing gun. Granville.

GYR'ATION. n. f. [gyro, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.

This effluviu attenuateth and impelleth the neighbour air, which, returning home, in a gyration carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the electrick. Brown.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyrations, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the sensation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impressed on the sensorium, until the coal return again to the same place. Newton.

GYRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing moving in an orbit.

No thenceforth his approved skill to ward,

Or strike, or huzen round in warlike gyre,

Remember'd he; ne car'd for his safe guard,

But rudely rag'd. Spenser.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,

And to the south by thy direction fly?

Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace? Sandys.

He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll

In wrestles gyres about the arctic pole. Sandys.

Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres,

Then falls, and in much foam his foul expires. Dryden.

GYRED. adj. Falling in rings.

Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd,

No hat upon his head, his stockings loose

Ungarter'd, and down gyred to his ankle. Shakspere.

GYVES. n. f. [gyvys, Welsh.] Fetters;

chains for the legs.

The villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on. Shakspere.

And knowing this, should I yet stay,

Like such as blow away their lives,

And never will redeem a day,

Enamour'd of their golden gyves? Ben Jonson.

The poor prisoners, boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyves. Kneller.

Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton.

But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet

A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;

So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,

His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryden.

To GYVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to ensnare.

With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smite upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship. Shakspere's Othello.

H

H Is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, founded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, behaviour: where it is followed by a

VOL. I.

H A

consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, bought.

HA. interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard:

What says the golden chest? ha! let me see. Shakspere.

H A

Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!

It is my Hastings! Rowe's Jane Shore.

2. An expression of laughter. Used with reduplication.

He saith among the trumpets ha, ha, and he smelleth the battle afar off. Job.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and row'd;

Our plots and delusions

Have wrought such confusions,

That the monarch's a slave to the crown. Dryden.

HAAK. n. f. A fish. Ansforth.
HABEAS CORPUS. [Latin.] A writ, the which, a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own cost, and to answer the cause there.

Cowell.

HABERDASHER. n. f. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minsbew from habt ibr dafs, German, have you this, the expression of a shopkeeper offering his wares to sale.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.

Because these cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop.

Bacon.

Swift.

3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequent doing the same thing.

Locke.

He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the count palatine.

Shakspeare.

Custom; inveterate use.

The last fatal step is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persist in it, 'till at length it settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin; which being that which the apostle calls the finishing of sin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infliction.

South.

No civil broils have since his death arose,
 But faction now by habit does obey;

And wars have that respect for his repose,
 As winds for hakeys when they breed at sea.

Dryden.

The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits, as shall ever afterwards remain.

Addison.

TO HABIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; to accoutre; to array.

Present yourself and your fair person
 Before Leontes:

She shall be habited as it becomes
 The partner of your bed.

Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

Having called to his memory Sir George Villiers, and the cloaths he used to wear, in which at that time he seemed to be habited, he thought him to be that person.

Glenden.

They habited themselves like those rural deities, and imitated them in their rustic dances.

Dryden.

HABITABLE. adj. [habitable, French; habitabilis, Latin.] Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown.

Bacon.

That was her torrid and inflaming time;
 This is her habitable tropique climate.

Dante.

The torrid zone is now found habitable.
 Look round the habitable world, how few Know their own good, or knowing it pursue.

Dryden.

HABITABLENESS. n. f. [from habitable.] Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the equinoctial line decides that controversy of the habitableness of the torrid zone.

Morr.

Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the being of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated.

Ray.

HABITANCE. n. f. [habitatio, Latin.] Dwelling; abode.

What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,
 That here in desert hast thine habitation?

And these rich heaps of wealth do't hide apart
 From the world's eye, and from her sight of face.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

HABITANT. n. f. [habitant, French; habitans, Latin.] Dweller; one that lives in any place; inhabitant.

Not to earth are those bright luminaries
 Officious; but to the earth's habitant.

Milton.

Powers celestial to each other's view
 Stand still confess, though distant far they lie,
 Or habitants of earth, or sea, or sky.

Pope.

HABITATION. n. f. [habitation, French; habitatio, Latin.]

1. The state of a place receiving dwellers.

Amplitude almost immense, with stars
 Numerous, and every star perhaps a world
 Of destin'd habitation.

Milton.

2. Act of inhabiting; state of dwelling.

Palaces,

For want of habitation and repair,
 Dissolve to heaps of ruins.

Denham.

Rocks and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habitation, were by continual deterioration brought to a lower pitch.

Hoodward.

3. Place of abode; dwelling.

Wisdom, to the end she might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all; she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us.

Hooker.

God oft descends to visit men

Unseen, and through their habitations walks
 To mark their doings.

Milton.

HABITATOR. n. f. [Latin.] Dweller; inhabitant.

The sun's presence is more continued unto the northern inhabitants; and the longest day in Canter is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the southern habitators.

Brown.

HABITUAL. adj. [habituél, from habit, French.] Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition. It is used for both good and ill.

Sin, there in power before

Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant.

Milton.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims.

South.

By length of time

The scurf is worn away of each committed crime:

No speck is left of their habitual stains;
 But the pure ether of the soul remains.

Dryden.

'Tis impossible to become an able artist, without making your art habitual to you.

Dryden.

HABITUALLY. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily; by habit.

Tilley.

Such as live in a rarer air are *habituat*ed to the exercise of a greater muscular strength.

Arbuthnot.

HABITUDE. n. f. [habitudo, Latin; habitude, French.]

1. Relation; respect; state with regard to something else.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the sun.

Brown.

The will of God is like a freight unalterable rule, but the various comportments of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or holding conformity to it, occasions several habitudes of this rule unto it.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It results from the very nature of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another.

South.

As by the objective part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred, so by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitude of man toward that best object.

Norris.

In all the habitudes of life,
 The friend, the mistress, and the wife,
 Variety we still pursue.

Swift.

2. Familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.

3. Long custom; habit; inveterate use.

This is more properly habit.

Mankind is willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitude.

Dryden.

Thy ear, inur'd to charitable sounds,
 And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
 Of jest obscene, and vulgar illadry,
 The ill-bred question, and the loud reply,
 Brought by long habitude from bad to worse:
 Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse.

Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.

It is impossible to gain an exact habitude without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice. Dryden.

HACANAR. adv. [hap ne hap, or nap; as would nould, or ne would; will nill, or ne will; that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.

He circles draws, and squares,
With cyphers, ulral characters,
Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em,
Although set down habnab at random. Hudib.

To HACK. v. a. [haecan, Saxon; hacken, Dutch; baeber, French; from acape, an axe, Saxon.]

1. To cut into small pieces; to chop; to cut slightly with frequent blows; to mangle with unskilful blows. It bears commonly some notion of contempt or malignity.

He put on that armour, whereof there was no one piece wanting, though hacked in some places, betraying some light not long since passed.

What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and say it was in fight! Shaksp.
Richard the second here was hack'd to death.

I'll fight 'till from my bones my flesh be hacked.
Shaksp.

One flourishing branch of his most royal root
Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe.

Burn me, hack me, hew me into pieces.
Dryden.

Not the hack'd helmet, not the dusty field,
But purple vetts, and dowy garlands please.

But fare with butchers plac'd thy priestly stall,
Neck modern faith to murder, hack, and mawl.

2. To speak unreadily, or with hesitation. Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English.

To HACK. v. n. To hackney; to turn hackney or prostitute.

HACKLE. n. f. Raw silk; any flimsy substance unipun.

Take the hackle of a cock, or capon's neck, or a plover's top: take off one side of the feather, and then take the hackle silk, gold or silver thread, and make these fast at the butt of the hook.

To HACKLE. v. a. To dress flax.

HACKNEY. n. f. [hacknai, Welsh; hackeneye, Teutonic; haquenee, French.]

1. A pacing horse.
2. A hired horse; hired horses being usually taught to pace, or recommended as good pacers.

Light and lewd persons were as easily suborned to make an affidavit for money, as post-horses and hackneys are taken to hire.

Who, mounted on a hoom, the nag
And hackney of a Lapland hag,
In quest of you came hither post.

3. A hireling; a prostitute.

Three kingdoms rung
With his accumulative and hackney tongue.

That is no more than every lover
Does for his hackney lady suffer.

Shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,
Or each new pension'd cyclophant, pretend
To break new windows.

4. Any thing let out for hire.

A wit can study in the streets;
Not quite so well, however, as one ought;
A hackney coach may chance to spoil a thought.

5. Much used; common.

These notions young students in physick derive from their hackney authors.

To HACKNEY. v. a. [from the noun.]

To practise in one thing; to accustom, as to the road.

He is long hackney'd in the ways of men.

HACQUETON. n. f. [haquet, old French, a little horse.] Some piece of armour.

You may see the very fashion of the Irish horseman in his long boots, riding shoes or costly cordwain, his haqueton, and his habergeon.

HAD. The preterit and part. pass. of have.

I had better, you had better, &c. means the same as, it would be better for me or you; or, it would be more eligible: it is always used potentially, not indicatively: nor is have ever used to that import. We say likewise, it had been better or worse.

I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a great queen with this condition.

Had we not better leave this Utica,
To arm Numidia in our cause?

HADDOCK. n. f. [badot, French.] A sea fish of the cod kind, but small.

The coast is plentifully stored with pilchards, herrings, and haddock.

HAFT. n. f. [haeft, Saxon; heft, Dutch; from To have or hold.] A handle; that part of any instrument that is taken into the hand.

This brandish'd dagger
I'll bury to the haste in her fair breast.

These extremities of the joints are the hasts and handles of the members.

A needle is a simple body, being only made of steel; but a sword is a compound, because its haste or handle is made of materials different from the blade.

To HAFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To set in a haft.

HAG. n. f. [haegerre, a goblin, Saxon; beckle, a witch, Dutch.]

1. A fury; a she-monster.

Thus spoke th' impatient pince, and made a pause:
His foul hags rais'd their heads, and clapt their bands;

And all the powers of hell, in full applause,
Flourish'd their snakes, and toa their flaming brands.

2. A witch; an enchantress.

Out of my dows, you witch! you hag, you baggage, you poultar, you rannion.

3. An old ugly woman.

Such afflictions may become the young;
But thou old hag of threescore years and three,
Is shewing of thy parts in Greece for thee?

To HAG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harass with vain terror.

That makes them in the dark see visions,
And hag themselves with apparitions.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens, tales, and visions!

HAGARD. adj. [hagard, French.]

1. Wild; untamed; irreclaimable.

As hagard hawk, presuming to contend
With hardy fowl above his able might,

His weary pounces all in vain doth spend,
To trust the prey too heavy for his flight.

She's too disdainful;
I know her spirits are as coy and wild,
As hagard as the rock.

2. [bager, German.] Lean; rugged; perhaps, ugly. To this sense I have put the following passage; for the author ought to have written bagard.

A hagg'd caison of a wolf, and a jolly sort of dog, with good flesh upon 's back, fell into company together.

3. Deformed with passion; wildly disordered.

Fearful besides of what in fight had pass'd,
His hands and hagard eyes to heav'n he cast.

Where are the conscious looks, the face now pale,

Now flushing red, the down-cast hagard eyes,
Or fix on earth, or slowly rais'd!

HAGGARD. n. f.

1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.

I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggard.

2. A species of hawk.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the south by thy direction fly?

I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the aires, the brancher, the ramish hawk, and the haggard.

3. A hag. So Garth has used it for want of understanding it.

Beneath the gloomy cover of an yew,
In a dark grove, the baleful haggard lay,
Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day.

HAGGARDLY. adv. [from haggard.] Deformedly; uglily.

For her the rich Arabia sweats her gum;
And precious oils from distant Indies come,
How haggardly for'er she looks at home.

HAGGESS. n. f. [from bag or back.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and enclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with suet and spices.

HAGGISH. adj. [from bag.] Of the nature of a hag; deformed; horrid.

But on us both did haggish age steal on,
And wore us out of act.

To HAGGLE. v. a. [corrupted from hackle or back.] To cut; to chop; to mangle: always in a bad sense.

Suffolk first died, and York all haggled o'er,
Comes to him where in gore he lay interred.

To HAGGLE. v. n. To be tedious in a bargain; to be long in coming to the price.

HAGGLER. n. f. [from haggle.]

1. One that cuts.

2. One that is tardy in bargaining.

HAGIOGRAPHER. n. f. [ay, io and grapho.] A holy writer.

The Jews divide the holy scriptures of the old testament into the law, the prophets, and the hagiographers.

HAM. interj. An expression of sudden effort.

Her coats tuck'd up, and all her motions just,

She stamps, and then cries hak! at every touch.

HAIL. n. f. [hazel, Saxon.] Drops of rain frozen in their falling.

Thunder mix'd with hail, must rend the Egyptian sky.

H A I

To HAIL. v. n. To pour down hail.
My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation
when it shall hail, coming down on the forest.
Isaiah.

HAIL. interj. [hæl, health, Saxon: bail, therefore, is the same as salve of the Latins, or ὑγιαίνω of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry; health be to you. It is used likewise to things inanimate.
Hail, hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil.
Shakespeare.

Her sick head is bound about with clouds:
It does not look as it would have a hail,
Or health with'd in it, as on other morns.
Ben Jonson.

The angel hail
Bestow'd, the holy salutation us'd
Long after to blest Mary, second Eve.
Milton.

Farewell, happy felix,
Where joy for ever dwells! hail horns! hail Infernal world! and thou profoundest hell
Receive thy new possessor!
Milton.

All hail, he cry'd, thy country's grace and love.
Once first of men below, now first of birds above.
Dryden.

Hail to the sun! from whose returning light
The cheerful soldier's arms new lustre take.
Rowe.

To HAIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To salute; to call to.
A galley drawing near unto the shore, was hail'd by a Turk, accompanied with a troop of horsemen.
Knollys.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your
breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest.
Dryden.

HA'ILSHOT. n. f. [bail and shot.] Small shot scattered like hail.
The master of the artillery did visit them sharply with murdering hailshots, from the pieces mounted towards the top of the hill.
Hayward.

HA'ILSTONE. n. f. [bail and stone.] A particle or single ball of hail.
You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun.
Shakespeare.

Hard hailstones lie not thicker on the plain,
Nor shaken oaks such showers of acorns rain.
Dryden.

HA'ILY. adj. [from bail.] Consisting of hail.
From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold north congeals to haily showers.
Pope.

HAIR. n. f. [hæp, Saxon.]

1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegument or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrulling forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow.
Quincy.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls.
Shakespeare.

Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin,
be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a duil?
Locke.

2. A single hair.

H A L

Naughty lady,
These hairs which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee.
Shakespeare.

Much is breeding;
Which, like the courter's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison.
Shakespeare.

3. Any thing proverbially small.
If thou tak'st more
Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou dost it.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written.
Dryden.

4. Course; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.
He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies:
if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession.
Shakespeare.

HAIRBEL. n. f. A flower; the hyacinth.

HAIRBRAINED. adj. [This should rather be written hairsbrained, unconstant, unsettled, wild as a bare.] Wild; irregular; unsteady.
Let's leave this town; for they are hairbrain'd slaves,
And hunger will enforce them be more eager.
Shakespeare.

HAIRBREADTH. n. f. [hair and breath.] A very small distance; the diameter of a hair.
Seven hundred chosen men left-handed could sling stones at an hairbreadth, and not miss.
Judges.

I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and field;
Of hairbreadth 'scapes in th' imminent deadly breach.
Shakespeare.

HAIRCLOTH. n. f. [hair and cloth.] Stuff made of hair, very rough and prickly, worn sometimes in mortification.
It is composed of reeds and parts of plants woven together, like a piece of haircloth.
Grew.

HAIRLACE. n. f. [hair and lace.] The fillet with which women tie up their hair.
Some worms are commonly resembled to a woman's hairlace or fillet, thence called tenia.
Harvey.

If Molly happens to be careless,
And but neglects to warm her hairlace,
She gets a cold as sure as death.
Swift.

HAIRLESS. adj. [from hair.] Wanting hair.
Whitebeards have arm'd their thin and hairless
scalps
Against thy majesty.
Shakespeare.

Clarendon.

HA'LCYON. n. f. [halcyo, Latin.] A bird, of which it is said that she breeds in the sea, and that there is always a calm during her incubation.
Such smiling rogues, as these, forth every pathos,
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With every gale and vary of the masters.
Shakespeare.

Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be,
As halcyons brooding on a winter sea.
Dryden.

HA'LCYON. adj. [from the noun.] Placid; quiet; still; peaceful.
When great Augustus made war's tempest cease,
His halcyon days brought forth the arts of peace.
Denham.

No man can expect eternal serenity and halcyon days from so incompetent and partial a cause, as the constant course of the sun in the equinoctial circle.
Bentley.

HALE. adj. [This should rather be written bail, from bel, health.] Healthy; sound; hearty; well complexioned.
My teety sheep like well below,
For they been hale enough I trow,
And liken their abode.
Spenser.

Some of these wise partizans concluded the government had hired two or three hundred hale men, to be pinioned, if not executed, as the pretended captives.
Addison.

His stomach too begins to fail;
Last year we thought him strong and hale,
But now he's quite another thing:
I wish he may hold out 'till spring.
Swift.

To HALE. v. a. [halen, Dutch; haler, French.] To drag by force; to pull violently and rudely.
Fly to your house;
The plebeians have got your fellow tribune,
And hale him up and down.
Shakespeare.

Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I must attend. Dryden.

Whether men write court or Roman hand, or any other, there is something peculiar in every one's writing. Cockburn.

The way to teach to write, is to get a plate graved with the characters of such hand you like
Locke.

Constantia saw that the hand writing agreed with the contents of the letter. Addison.

I present these thoughts in an ill hand; but scholars are bad penmen, we seldom regard the mechanick part of writing. Felton.

They were wrote on both sides, and in a small hand. Arbutnot.

42. HAND over head. Negligently; rashly; without seeing what one does.

So many strokes of the alarm bell of fear and awaking to other notions, and the facility of the titles, which hand over head, have served their turn, doth ring the peal so much the louder. Bacon.

A country fellow got an unlucky tumble from a tree: Thus 'tis, says a passenger, when people will be doing things hand over head, without either fear or wit. L'Estrange.

43. HAND to HAND. Close fight.

—Your friend, Sir, the hangman: you must be so good, Sir, to stand and be put to death. Shakespeare.
Men do not stand

In so ill case, that God hath with his hand Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate;

Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate. Donne.

I never knew a crick, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself; as the hangman is generally a worse manufacturer than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Addison.

2. A term of reproach, either serious or ludicrous.

One cried, God bless us! and Amen! the other;

As they had seen me with these hangmen's hands:
Listening their fear, I could not say Amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakespeare.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him woman's heart ache: you han't that finger about the mouth for nothing. Idiot.

HAP. n. f. [anap, in Welsh, is misfortune.]

1. Chance; fortune.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flowing forth with the flood,
In her rude hands sweet flowers themselves did fly,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did en-wrap. Spenser.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Could be good haps, and could be they that build
Their hopes on haps, and do not in like despair
For all their certain laws the truth thereof. Sidney.

To have effected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it has been the hap-treaver to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having seen a course themselves, must be glad to see their example followed. Hooker.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot still have the like hap. Hooker.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knutles.

A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Of armed men; for often had the seen
The tragick end of many a bloody fray:
Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Rainfore.

HAP-HAZARD. n. f. Chance; accident; perhaps originally hap hazard.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but to hard that all shun it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by haphazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge's sake. Hooker.

We live at hap-hazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

TO HAP. v. n. [from the noun.]

sense happily is written erroneously for haply.
One thing more I shall wish you to desire of them, who happily may peruse these two treatises. Digby.

HAPPINESS. n. f. [from happy.]

1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.
Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hobbes.
Oh! happiness of sweet retir'd content,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.
Philosophers differ about the chief good or happiness of man. Temple.
The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke.
2. Good luck; good fortune.
3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.
Certain graces and happinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words.
Denham.
Some beauties yet no precepts can declare;
For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope.
Form'd by some rule that guides but not constrains,
And finish'd more through happiness than pains. Pope.

HAPPY. adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck.]

- HARQUETON. n. f. A coat of mail. Spenser.
- HARA'NGUE. n. f. [harangue, French.
The original of the French word is much questioned: Mirabeau thinks it a corruption of bearng, English; Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringo seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from orare, or orationare, orationer, orater, oranger, haranguer.] A speech; a popular oration.

Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors
mix'd,
Assemble, and harangues are heard, but soon
In factious opposition. Milton.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys

Locke.

HAREBELL. n. f. [hare and bell.] A blue flower campaniform.

Thomson: not lack

The flower that's like thy face, pale primrose;

The azure'd harebell, like thy veins.

Shakespeare.

HAREBRAINED. adj. [trou hare, the verb, and brain.] Volatile; unfettered; wild; fluttering; hurried.

That harebrained wild fellow begins to play

the fool, when others are weary of it.

Bacon.

HAREFOOT. n. f. [hare and foot.]

1. A bird.

Ainsworth.

2. An herb.

Ainsworth.

HARELIP. n. f. A fissure in the upper lip with want of substance, a natural defect.

The blots of nature's hand

Shall not in their issue stand;

Never mole, harelip, nor scar,

Shall upon their children be.

Shakespeare.

The third stitch is performed with pins or needles, as in harelips.

Wifeman.

HARESEAR. n. f. [hupleurum, Lat.] A plant.

Miller.

HARRIER. n. f. [from hare.] A dog for hunting hares.

Ainsworth.

To HARK. v. n. [contracted from hearken.] To listen.

The king,

To me inveterate, hark! my brother's suit.

Pricking up his ears, to hark

If he could hear too in the dark.

Hudibras.

HARK. interj. [It is originally the imperative of the verb bark.] Listen!

What harmony is this? My good friends, hark!

Shakespeare.

The butcher saw him upon the gallop with a piece of flesh, and called out, Hark ye, friend,

you may make the best of your purchase.

L'Estrange.

Hark! methinks the roar that late pursu'd me,

Sinks like the murmurs of a falling wind.

Hark how loud the woods

Invite you forth!

Thomson.

HARK. n. f.

1. The filaments of flax.

2. Any filamentous substance.

The general sort are wicker hives, made of privet, willow, or hark, daubed with cow-dung.

Mortimer.

HARLEQUIN. n. f. [This name is said to have been given by Francis of France to a busy buffoon, in ridicule of his enemy Charles le quint. Menage derives it more probably from a famous comedian that frequented Mr. Harley's house, whom his friends called Harlequino, little

Harley. Trev.] A buffoon who plays tricks to divert the populace; a

Jack-pudding; a zani.

The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress.

Dryden.

The man in graver tragic known,

Though his best part long since was done,

Still on the stage desires to tarry;

And he who play'd the harlequin,

After the jest still leads the scene,

Unwilling to retire, though weary.

Prior.

HARLOT. n. f. [berlodes, Welsh, a girl. Others for bordelet, a little whore.

Others from the name of the mother of William the Conqueror. Hurlet is used in Chaucer for a low male drudge.] A whore; a strumpet.

Away, my disposition, and possess me with

Some harlot's spirit.

Shakespeare.

They help thee by such aids as geese and harlots.

Ben Jonson.

The luscious harlots crowd the pulchick place;

Go, fools, and purchase an unclean embrace.

Dryden.

HARLOTRY. n. f. [from harlot.]

1. The trade of a harlot; fornication.

Not shall,

From Rome's tribunals, thy harangues prevail

'Gainst harlotry, while thou art clad so thin.

Dryden.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.

A peevish fell-will'd harlotry,

That no persuasion can do good upon.

Shakespeare.

HARM. n. f. [hearm, Saxon.]

1. Injury; crime; wickedness.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt.

We, ignorant of ourselves,

Regotten our own harm, which the wise Powers

Deny us for our good.

Shakespeare.

How are we happy still in fear of harm?

But harm proceeds not sin.

Milton.

They should be suffered to write on: it would keep them out of harm's way, and prevent them from evil courses.

Swift.

To HARM. v. n. To hurt; to injure.

What sense had I of her sin hours or lust?

I saw 't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Passions ne'er could grow

To harm another, or impeach your rest.

After their young are hatched, they brood them under their wings, lest the cold, and sometimes the heat, should harm them.

Ray.

HARMFUL. adj. [harm and full.] Hurtful; mischievous; noxious; injurious;

detrimental.

His dearly loved squire

His spear of heben-wood behind him bare,

Whose harmful head, thrice heard in the fire,

Had given many a breach with pike-head square.

Spenser.

Let no man fear that harmful creature less, be cause he sees the apostle safe from that poison.

Hall.

The earth brought forth fruit and food for man, without any mixture of harmful quality.

Raleigh.

For flax and oats will burn the tender field,

And sleepy poppies harmful harvests yield.

Dryden.

HARMFULLY. adv. [from harmful.]

Hurtfully; noxiously; detrimentally.

A scholar is better occupied in playing or sleeping, than spending his time not only usefully,

but harmfully in such kind of exercise.

Johnson.

HARMFULNESS. n. f. [from harmful.]

Hurtfulness; mischievousness; noxious-

ness.

HARMLESS. adj. [from harm.]

1. Innocent; innoxious; not hurtful.

Touching ceremonies harmless in themselves, and hurtful only in respect of number, was it amiss to decree that those things that were least needful, and newliest come, should be the first that were taken away?

Hooker.

She, like harmless lightning, throws her eye

On him, her brothers, me, her master; hitting

Each object with a joy.

Shakespeare.

2. Unhurt; undamaged.

The shipwright will be careful to gain by his labour, or at least to save himself harmless, and therefore suit his work lightly, according to a slight price.

Raleigh.

HARMLESSLY. adv. [from harmless.]

Innocently; without hurt; without crime.

He spent that day free from worldly trouble, harmless, and in a recreation that became a churchman.

Walton.

Bullets batter the walls which stand inaccessible, but sail harmlessly into wood or feathers.

Deacy of Piety.

HARMLESSNESS. n. f. [from harmless.]

Innocence; freedom from tendency to injury or hurt.

When, through tasteless flat humility,

In dough-bak'd men some harmless we see,

'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he.

Deane.

Compare the harmlessness, the credulity, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenious phrases to virtuous counsels, which is in youth

untainted, with the mischievousness, the syncrisis, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obstinacy in an aged long-practised finer.

South.

HARMONICAL. adj. [harmonios; harmoni-

cal.] [harmoni, French.]

1. Relating to music; susceptible of musical proportion to each other.

After every three whole notes, nature requir-eth, for all harmonical use, one half note to be interpreted.

Bacon.

2. Concordant; musical; proportioned to each other: less properly.

Harmonical sounds, and discordant sounds, are both active and positive; but blackness and darkness are, indeed, but privatives.

Bacon.

So swell each wind-pipe; all intones to all,

Harmonick twang of leather, horn and brass.

Pope.

HARMONIOUS. adj. [harmonieux, French,

from harmony.]

1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other; symmetrical.

All the wide-extended sky,

And all the harmonious worlds on high,

And Virgil's sacred work shall dye.

Corley.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal.

Locke.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other;

musical; symphonious.

Thoughts that voluntary move harmonious numbers.

Milton.

The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us:

they who lived with him, thought it musical.

Not chaos-like, together crush'd and bruish'd;
But as the world, harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not to worship the instrument, but him that makes the music.

HARMONIOUSNESS. n. f. [from harmonious.] Proportion; musicalness.

TO HARMONIZE. v. a. [from harmony.] To adjust in fit proportions; to make musical.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime.

HARMONY. n. f. [ἁρμονία; harmonie, French.]

1. The just adaptation of one part to another.

The pleasures of the eye and ear are but the effects of equality, good proportion, or correspondence; so that equality and correspondence are the causes of harmony.

The harmony of things,
As well as that of sounds, from discord springs.

Sure infinite wisdom must accomplish all its works with consummate harmony, proportion, and regularity.

2. Just proportion of sound; musical concord.

The sound
Symphonious, of ten thousand harps that tun'd Angelic harmonies.
Harmony is a compound idea, made up of different sounds united.

3. Concord; correspondent sentiment.

In us both one soul,
Harmony to behold in wedded pair!
More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear.

I no sooner in my heart divin'd,
My heart, which by a secret harmony
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet!

HARNESS. n. f. [harnois, French; supposed from iern or biern, Runick; biarn, Welsh and Erse, iron.]

1. Armour; defensive furniture of war. Somewhat antiquated.

A goodly knight, all dress'd in harness meet,
That from his head no place appeared to his feet.

Of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness.
Were I a great man, I should fear to drink:
Great men should drink with harness on their throats.

2. The traces of draught horses, particularly of carriages of pleasure or state; of other carriages we say gear.

Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shall be trapp'd,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl.

Their steeds around,
Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground.

TO HARNESS. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in armour.
He was harnest light, and to the field goes he.

Full fifty years, harnest'd in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast.

2. To fix horses in their traces.
Before the dust her iron chariot flood,
All ready harnest for journey new.

Harnest the horses, and get up the horsemen,
and stand forth with your hamlets.
When I plough my ground, my horse is harnest
and chained to my plough.
To the harnest yoke
They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil.

HARP. n. f. [heapp, Saxon; harpe, Fr.] It is used through both the Teutonick and Roman dialects, and has been long in use.

Romansq; lyrâ plaudat tibi, Barbarus harpa.
Ven. Forc.]

1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and commonly struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempest's cruel wreck
He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,
Through the sweet music which his harp did make,
Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works.

Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire;
The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies

The shell, as lightest, first begins to rise;
Thus when sweet Orpheus struck, to lift'ning rocks
He sentes gave, and ears to wither'd oaks.

TO HARP. v. n. [harper, French, from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps.

Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harp'd?

The helmeted cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heav'n's new-born beir.

You harp a little too much upon one string.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear.

For thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'rt harp'd my fear aright.

Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was.

HARPER. n. f. [from harp.] A player on the harp.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue;
Nor woe in rhyme, like a blind harper's song.

I'm the god of the harp: stop my fairest—in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again.

HARPING IRON. n. f. [from harpago, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger son:
Who, when he felt his side so rudely gaur'd,
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd.

HARPONEER. n. f. [harponeur, French, from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whalefishing.

HARPOON. n. f. [harpon, French.] A harping iron.

HARPISCHORD. n. f. A musical instrument, strung with wire, and played by striking keys.

HARPY. n. f. [harpyia, Latin; harpie, harpie, French.]

1. The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures, which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured.

That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle.

2. A ravenous wretch; an extortioner.

I will do you any ambassage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy.

HARQUEBUSS. n. f. [See ARQUEBUSE.] A hand-gun.

HARQUEBUSSIER. n. f. [from harquebuss.] One armed with a harquebuss.

Twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers were ranged in length, and but five in a rank.

HARRIDAN. n. f. [corrupted from harridelle, Fr. a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed trumpet.

See just endur'd the winter she began,
And in four months a better'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wether'd, pale, and shrank:

To bawd for others, and go shares with punk.

HARROW. n. f. [charroue, French; harken, German, a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods, and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down.

TO HARROW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with earth by the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,
Not only thy person, but also thy beans.

2. To break with the harrow.

Can't thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee?

Let the Volscians
Plow Rome, and harrow Italy.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,

Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack.

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners: and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions. [from herygian, Saxon.] Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy frowe,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bourne. Butter Queen.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Did'st make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, did'st bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenser.

6. To disturb; to put into commotion.
[This should rather be written barry,
harer, French.]

Must like; it harrows me with fear and wonder.
Shakespeare.

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and care.
Milton.

HARROW. interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Now out of use.

Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light,
To see my lad so deadly damnify'd? Spenser.

HARROWER. n. f. [from harrow.]

1. He who harrows.

2. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.

TO HARRY. v. a. [harer, French.]

1. To tease; to hare; to ruffle.
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.
—I repent me much

That I to harry'd him. Shakespeare.

2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a nest; that is, he took the young away: as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See TO HAR- ROW.

HARSH. adj. [herfische, Germ. Skinner.]

1. Austere; roughly four.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some sorts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing harsh or bitter ought to appear. Denb.
Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh and salt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes. Locke.

The same defect of heat which gives a fierce-ness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries. Swift.

2. Rough to the ear.

A name unmusical to Volscian ears,
And harsh in sound to thine. Shakespeare.
Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But satire needs not that, and wit will shine
Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line. Dryden.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.

Thy lord commands thee now
With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To servile duties. Dryden.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.

He was a wise man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty. Bacon.
Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Taylor.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou can'st not praise.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harsh word proceed from him.

Atterbury.

4. Rugged to the touch; rough.

Black feels as if you were feeling needles points,
or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth.

Boyle.

5. Unpleasing; rigorous.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher
charm'd. Dryden.

HARSHLY. adv. [from harsh.]

HARSHLY. adv. [from harsh.]

HARSHLY. adv. [from harsh.]

HARSHLY. adv. [from harsh.]

1. Sourly; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripe.

'Tis, like ripe fruit, thou drop Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton.

3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.
I would rather be a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.

4. Unpleasantly to the ear.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day;
I tell you, 'twould sound harshly in her ears.

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy. Shakspeare.

The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.

HARSHNESS. n. f. [from harsh.]

1. Sourness; austere taste.
Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard:
the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Bacon.

2. Roughness to the ear.
Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.
Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their found. Dryden.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The found must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

3. Ruggedness to the touch.
Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon.

4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.
Thy tender hefted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and not burn. Shakespeare.

HART. n. f. [heort, Saxon.] A he deer;
the male of the roe.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare.

The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. May's Virgil.

HART-ROYAL. n. f. A plant. A species of buckthorn plantain.

HARTSHORN. n. f. A drug.

Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use many ways, and under many forms. What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorific, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies:
It is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill.

Ramose concretions of the volatile salts are ob-servable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn. Woodw.

HARTSHORN. n. f. An herb. Ainsw.

HARTSTONGUE. n. f. [lingua cervina,
Latin.] A plant.

It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe.

Hartstongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Martimer.

HARTWORT. n. f. [tordylium, Latin.]

An umbelliferous plant. Miller.

HARVEST. n. f. [hærfest, Saxon.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.

As it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakespeare.
With harvest work he is worse than in spring.
L'Estrange.

2. The corn ripened, gathered, and inned.
From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd.

Shakespeare.

When the father is too fondly kind,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find.
Dryden.

3. The product of labour.

Let us the harvest of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden.

HARVEST-HOME. n. f.

1. The song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest.

Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels reap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden.

2. The time of gathering harvest.

At harvest-home, and on the shearing day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay.
Dryden.

3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.
His wife I will use as the key of the cuckoldly rogue's coffer; and there's my harvest-home. Shakspeare.

HARVEST-LORD. n. f. The head reaper
at the harvest.

Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tupper.

HARVESTER. n. f. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.

HARVESTMAN. n. f. [harvest and man.]

A labourer in harvest.
Like to a harvest-man that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakespeare.

TO HASH. v. n. [bacher, French.] To mince; to chop into small pieces and mingle.

He rais'd his arm
Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick,
As if he meant to hash her quick. Hudibras.

What have they to complain of but too great variety, though some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order and politeness; but hashed up in haste? Guth.

HASK. n. f. This seems to signify a case or habitation made of rushes or flags. Obsolete.

Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Establish'd bath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hask. Spenser.

HASLET. } n. f. [hasla, Islandick, a HARSLET. } bundle; basterel, bastereau, bastier, French.] The heart, liver, and lights, of a hog, with the windpipe, and part of the throat to it.

HASP. n. f. [hæpp, Saxon, whence in some provinces it is yet called haspe.] A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.

Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Martimer.

TO HASP. v. n. [from the noun.] To shut with a hasp.

HAS-SOCK. n. f. [hassek, Oerpp.] Skinner.

1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.

He found his parishioners very irregular: and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassek and common prayer book. Addison.

2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hassock and hask are the same.

HAST. The second person singular of have.

HASTE. n. f. [haste, Fr. haste, Dut.]

1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.

Spare him, death!
But O, thou wilt not, can'st not spare!
Haste hath never time to hear. Grasshu.
Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,
Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;
But as the present, so the last age writ;
In both we find like negligence and wit.

In as much haste, as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden.
The wretched father running to their aid
With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryden.

2. Passion; vehemence.

I said in my haste all men are liars. Psalms.

He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you to? Shakespeare.

They were troubled and hasted away. Psalms.
All those things are pass'd away like a shadow,
and as a post that hasted by. Wisdom.

Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
Like mortal life to meet eternity. Denham.
These rites perform'd, the prince, without delay,
Hastes to the nether world, his destin'd way. Dryden.

To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste
Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall haste. Pope.
Soon as the sun awakes, the sprightly court
Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport. Prior.

- To HASTE. } v. a. To push forward;
To HA'STEN. } to urge on; to precipitate; to drive a swifter pace.

Let it be so hastid, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. Shakespeare.
All hopes of succour from your arms are past;
To save us now, you must our ruin haste. Dryd.
Each sees his lamp with diff'rent lustre crown'd;
Each knows his course with diff'rent periods bound;
And in his passage through the liquid space,
Nor hasten nor retards his neighbour's race. Prior.

- HA'STENER. n. f. [from hasten.] One that hastens or hurries.

HA'STILY. adv. [from hasty.]

1. Haste; speed.

2. Hurry; precipitation.

A fellow being out of breath, or seeming to be for haste, with humble hastings told Basilus. Sidney.

3. Rash eagerness.

The turns of his verse, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers, and his gravity, I have as far imitated as the poverty of our language, and the hastings of my performance, would allow. Dryden.

There is most just cause to fear, lest our hastiness to embrace a thing of so perilous consequence, should cause posterity to feel those evils. Hooker.

4. Angry tellings; passionate vehemence.
HA'STINGS. n. f. [from hasty.] Peas that come early.

The large white and green hastings are not to be set till the cold is over. Mortimer.

HA'STY. adj. [hastif, French, from haste; hastig, Dutch.]

1. Quick; speedy.

It is this counsel that we two have shar'd,
The sisters vows, the hours that we have spent,
When we have chid the hasty footed time
For parting us! Shakespeare.

2. Passionate; vehement.

He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding; but he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly. Proverbs.

3. Rash; precipitate.

Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words?
There is more hope of a fool than of him. Prov.
Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God. Eccles.

Beauty shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the summer. Isaiah.

HA'STY-PUDDING. n. f. A pudding made of milk and flower, boiled quick together; as also of oatmeal and water boiled together.

Sure hasty-pudding is thy chiefest dish,
With bullock's liver or some stinking fish. Dorset.

HAT. n. f. [hætt, Saxon; hatt, Germ.]

A cover for the head.

She's as big as he is; and there's her thrum hat, and her muffler too. Shakespeare.

Out of mere ambition you have made
Your holy hat be stamp on the king's coin. Shak.
His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish morion. Bacon.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd;
His hat adorn'd with wings disclos'd the god,
And in his hand he bore the sleep-compelling rod. Dryden.

HA'TBAND. n. f. [hat and band.] A string tied round the hat.

They had hats of blue velvet, with fine plumes of divers colours, set round like hatbands. Bacon.
Room for the noble gladiator! see
His coat and hatband shew his quality. Dryden.

HA'TCASE. n. f. [hat and case.] A slight box for a hat.

I might mention a hatecase, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. Addison.

To HATCH. v. a. [hecken, German, as Skinner thinks, from begben, egben, æg, egg, Saxon.]

1. To produce young from eggs by the warmth of incubation.

He kindly spreads his spacious wing,
And hatches plenty for th' ensuing spring. Denham.

The tepid caves, and fens and shores,
Their brood as numerous hatch from th' eggs,
that soon
Burstling with kindly rapture, forth disclos'd
Their callow young. Milton.

2. To quicken the egg by incubation.

When they have laid such a number of eggs as they can conveniently cover and hatch, they give over, and begin to sit.
Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, 'till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

3. To produce by precedent action.

Which thing they very well know, and, I doubt not, will easily confess, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Arians are renewed by them; who, to hatch their heresy, have chosen those churches as fittest nests, where Athanasius's creed is not heard. Hooker.

4. To form by meditation; to contrive.

He was a man harmless and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his safety and honour. Hayward.

5. [from hacher, French, to cut.] To shade by lines in drawing or graving.

Who first shall wound, through others arms,
his blood appearing fresh,
Shall win this sword, silver'd and hatched. Chapman.
Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again
As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shakespeare.
Those tender hairs, and those hatching strokes of the pencil, which make a kind of minced meat in painting, are never able to deceive the fight. Dryden.

To HATCH. v. n.

1. To be in a state of growing quick.

He observed circumstances in eggs, whilst they were hatching, which varied. Boyle.

2. To be in a state of advance toward effect.

1. A brood excluded from the egg.
2. The act of exclusion from the egg.
3. Disclosure; discovery.

Something 's in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy fits on brood:
And, I do doubt, the hatch and the disclosure
Will be some danger. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

4. [hæca, Saxon; hecke, Dutch, a bolt.] A half door; a door with opening over it; perhaps from hacher, to cut, as a hatch is part of a door cut in two.

Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the hatch. Shaksp.

5. [In the plural.] The doors or openings by which they descend from one deck or floor of a ship to another.

To the king's ship, invisible as thou art,
There shalt thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches. Shakespeare's Tempest.

There the 's hid;
The mariners all under hatches stow'd. Shaksp.
So seas, impell'd by winds with added pow'r,
Assault the sides, and o'er the hatches pour. Dryden.

A ship was fasten'd to the shore;
The plank was ready laid for safe ascent,
For shelter there the trembling shadow bent,
And kipp'd and skulk'd, and under hatches went. Dryden.

6. To be under HATCHES. To be in a state of ignominy, poverty, or depression.

He assures us how this fatherhood continued its course, 'till the captivity in Egypt, and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches. Locke.

7. Hatches. Floodgates. Ainsworth.

To HATCHEL. v. a. [hachelen, Germ.]

To beat flax so as to separate the fibrous from the brittle part.

The asbestos mentioned by Kircher, in his description of China, put into water, moulders like clay, and is a fibrous small excrescence, like hairs growing upon the stones; and for the hatchelling, spinning, and weaving it, he refers to his monstrum subterraneum. Woodward.

HA'TCHEL n. f. [from the verb; hacheb, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten.

HA'TCHELLER n. f. [from hatchel.] A beater of flax.

HA'TCHET n. f. [hache, hachette, Fr. ascia, Latin.] A small axe.

The hatchet is to hew the irregularities of stuff.

His harmful hatchet he bent in his hand,
And to the field he speedeth.
Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of a hatchet.
Nails, hammers, hatchets sharp, and hammers strong.

Tyrrius, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist.
Our countryman presented him with a curious hatchet, and asking him whether it had a good edge, tried it upon the donor.

HA'TCHET-FACE n. f. An ugly face;
such, I suppose, as might be hewn out of a block by a hatchet.

An ape his own dear image will embrace:
An ugly beau adores a hatchet-face.

HA'TCHMENT n. f. [corrupted from achievement. See ACHIEVEMENT.] Ar-morial escutcheon placed over a door at a funeral.

His means of death, his obscure funeral,
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment o'er his bones,
No noble rites nor formal ostentation,
Cry to be heard.

HA'TCHWAY n. f. [hatches and way.]
The way over or through the hatches.

To HATE v. a. [bazian, Saxon.] To detest; to abhor; to abominate; to regard with the passion contrary to love.
You are, I think, assur'd I love you not.
—Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

Do all men kill the thing they do not love?
—Hates any man the thing he would not kill?
—Every offence is not a hate at first.
Those old inhabitants of thy holy land thou hatest for doing most odious works.
But whatsoever our jarring fortunes prove,
Though our lords hate, methinks we two may love.

HATE n. f. [hate, Saxon.] Malignity;
detestation; the contrary to love.
Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your hate.
Hate to Mezentius, arm'd five hundred more.

Naucius teaches, that the afflicted are not ai-ways the objects of divine hate.

HA'TEFUL adj. [bate and full.]

1. That causes abhorrence; odious; abominable; detestable.

My name's Macbeth.
—The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.
There is no vice more hateful to God and man than ingratitude.

What owe I to his commands
Who bates me, and hath hitherto thrust me down,
To sit in hateful office here confin'd,
Inhabitant of heav'n, and heav'nly born?
I hear the tread
Of hateful steps; I must be viewless now.
But Umbriel, hateful gnome! I sue bears not so;
He breaks the phial whence the sorrows flow.

2. That feels abhorrence; abhorrent; de-testing; malignant; malevolent.

Palamon, compell'd
No more to try the fortune of the field;
And, worse than death, to view with hateful eyes
His rival's conquest.

HA'TEFULLY adv. [from hateful.]

1. Odiously; abominably.

3. Malignantly; maliciously.

All their hearts stood hatefully appal'd

Odiousness.

HA'TER n. f. [from bate.] One that hates; an abhorrer; a detester.

I of her underload of that most noble con-fiancy, which whosoever loves not, shews himself to be a hater of virtue, and unworthy to live in the society of mankind.
Whilst he stood up and spoke,
He was my master, and I wore my life
To spend upon his haters.
An enemy to God, and a hater of all good.

They never wanted so much knowledge as to inform and convince them of the unlawfulness of a man's being a murderer, an hater of God, and a covenant-breaker.

HA'TRED n. f. [from bate.] Hate; ill-will; malignity; malevolence; dislike;
abhorrence; detestation; abomination;
the passion contrary to love.

Hatred is the thought of the pain which any thing present or absent is apt to produce in us.

I wish I had a cause to seek him there,
To oppose his hated folly.

Hatred is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of averation and hostility included in its very essence; but then, if there could have been hatred in the world when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the com-pacts of its proper object.

Hatreds are often begotten from slight and almost innocent occasions, and quarrels propagated in the world.

Retain no malice nor hatred against any: be ready to do them all the kindness you are able.

She is a presbyterian of the most rank and violent kind, and consequently has an inveterate hatred to the church.
Hatred has in it the guilt of murder, and lust
the guilt of adultery.

To HA'TTER v. a. [perhaps corrupted from batter.] To harass; to weary;
to wear out with fatigue.

He's hatter'd out with penance.

HA'TTER n. f. [from bat.] A maker of hats.

A hatter sells a dozen of hats for five shillings
a-piece.

of corn.

HAU'BERK n. f. [hauberg, old French.]
A coat of mail; a breastplate.

Him on the hauberk struck the prince's fore,
That quite disparted all the linked frame,
And pierced to the skin.
Hauberks and helms are hew'd with many a
wound;

The mighty maces with such haste descend,
They break the bones, and make the solid armour bend.

To HAVE v. a. in the present I have;
thou hast, he hath; we, ye, they have;
pret. and part. pass. had. [haban,
Gothick; habban, Saxon; hebben,
Dutch; avoir, French; avere, Italian.]

1. Not to be without.

I have brought him before you, that after examination had, I might have something to write.

2. To carry; to wear.

9. To procure; to find.

I would have any one name to me that tongue, that one can speak as he should do, by the rules of grammar.

10. Not to neglect; not to omit.

I cannot speak; if my heart be not ready to burst! Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Your plea is good; but still I say beware:
Laws are explain'd by men; so have a care.

11. To hold; to regard.

Of the maid servants shall I be had in honour;

The proud have had me greatly in derision.

12. To maintain; to hold opinion.

Sometimes they will have them to be natural heat, whereas some of them are crude and cold;
and sometimes they will have them to be the qualities of the tangible parts, whereas they are things by themselves.

13. To contain.

You have of these pedlars that have more in
'em than you'd think, sister.
I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have every thing in him by wearing his apparel neatly.

14. To require; to claim.

What would these madmen have?
First they would bribe us without pence,
Deceive us without common sense,
And without pow'r enslave.

15. To be a husband or wife to another.

If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

16. To be engaged, as in a talk or employment.

If we maintain things that are established, we have to strive with a number of heavy prejudices, deeply rooted in the hearts of men.

The Spaniard's captain never hath to meddle with his soldiers pay.
Of the evils which hindered the peace and good ordering of that land, the inconvenience of the laws was the first which you had in hand.

Kings have to deal with their neighbours, their wives, their children, their prelates or clergy, their nobles, their merchants, and their common.

17. To wish; to desire; in a lax sense.

I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness.

I would have no man discouraged with that kind of life or series of actions, in which the choice of others, or his own necessities, may have engaged him.

18. To buy.

If these trifles were rated only by art and art-fulness, we should have them much cheaper.

19. It is most used in English, as in other European languages, as an auxiliary verb to make the tenses; have, hast, and hath, or has, the preterperfect; and had, and hadst, the preterpluperfect.

If there had been words enow between them to have exprest provocation, they had gone together by the ears. Congreve.

I have heard one of the greatest geniuses this age has produced, who had been trained up in all the polite studies of antiquity, assure me, upon his being obliged to search into records, that he at last took an incredible pleasure in it. Addison.

I have not here considered custom as it makes things easy, but as it renders them delightful; and though others have made the same reflections, it is possible they may not have drawn those uses from it. Addison.

That admirable precept which Pythagoras is said to have given to his disciples, and which that philosopher must have drawn from the observation I have enlarged upon. Addison.

The gods have placed labour before virtue. Addison.

This observation we have made on man. Addison.

Evil spirits have contracted in the body habits of evil and sensuality, malice and revenge. Addison.

There torments have already taken root in them. Addison.

That excellent author has shewn how every particular custom and habit of virtue will, in its own nature, produce the heaven, or a state of happiness, in him who shall hereafter practice it. Addison.

20. HAVE at, or with, is an expression denoting resolution to make some attempt. They seem to be imperative expressions; have this at you; let this reach you, or take this; have with you; take this with you; but this will not explain have at it, or have at him, which must be considered as mere elliptical; as, we will have a trial at it, or at him.

He that will caper with me for a thousand shanks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakespeare.

I can bear my part; 'tis my occupation: have at it with you. Shakespeare.

I never was out at a mad frolic, though this is the maddest I ever undertook: have with you, lady mine; I take you at your word. Dryden.

HA'VEN. n. f. [haven, Dutch; havre, French.]

1. A port; a harbour; a station for ships. Love was threatened and promised to him, and his cousin, as both the tempest and haven of their best years. Sidney.

lady's headdress: I have known it rise and fall.
Addison.

If ere with airy horns I planted heads,
Or discompos'd the headdresses of a pride. Pope.

2. Anything resembling a headdress, and prominent on the head.

Among birds the males very often appear in a most beautiful headdress, whether it be a crest, a comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, crested like a kind of pinnacle on the very top of the head. Shakspeare.

HE'ADER. n. f. [from head.]

1. One that heads nails or pins, or the like.

2. The first brick in the angle.

If the header of one side of the wall is toothed as much as the stretcher on the outside, it would be a stronger toothing, and the joints of the headers of one side would be in the middle of the headers of the course they lie upon of the other side. Mason.

HE'ADGARGLE. n. f. [head and gargle.]

A disease, I suppose, in cattle.
For the headgargle give powder of fenugreek.

HE'ADINESS. n. f. [from heady.] Hurry; rashness; stubbornness; precipitation; obstinacy.

If any will rashly blame such his choice of old and unwonted words, him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless headiness in condemning. Spenser.

HE'ADLAND. n. f. [head and land.]

1. Promontory; cape.

An heroic play ought to be an imitation of an heroic poem, and consequently love and valour ought to be the subject of it: both these sir William Davenant began to shadow; but it was so as discoverers draw their maps with headlands and promontories. Dryden.

2. Ground under hedges.

Now down with the grafts upon headlands about,
That groweth in shadow to rank and to rout.

Tupper.

HE'ADLESS. adj. [from head.]

1. Without a head; beheaded.

His shining helmet he 'gan soon unlace,
And left his headless body bleeding at the place.

Spenser.

Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling blocks,
And smooth my way upon their headless necks.

Shakespeare.

On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcase, and a nameless thing. Denham.
Prickly stubs, instead of trees, are found;
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

2. Without a chief.

They rested not until they had made the empire stand headless about seventeen years.

Raleigh.

3. Obstinate; inconsiderate; ignorant; wanting intellects: perhaps for headless.

either of witless headiness in judging, or of head- less hardness in condemning. Spenser.

HE'ADLONG. adj.

1. Steep; precipitous.

2. Rash; thoughtless.

3. Sudden; precipitate.

It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which many examples having taught them, never lost his place, 'till it came to a headlong overthrow. Sidney.

HE'ADLONG. adv. [from head and long.]1. With the head foremost. It is often doubtful whether this word be adjective or adverb.

I'll look no more,
Left my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple down headlong. Shakespeare.

Who, while he steering view'd the stars, and bore

His course from Africk to the Luthish shore, Fell headlong down. Dryden.

Headlong from thence the glowing fury springs,
And o'er the Theban palace spreads her wings.

Pope.

2. Rashly; without thought; precipi-tately.

To give Ahab such warning as might infallibly have prevented his destruction, was esteemed by him evil; and to push him on headlong into it, because he was fond of it, was accounted good.

South.

Some ask for envi'd pow'r, which publick hate
Pursues, and hurries headlong to their fate,
Down go the titles. Dryden.

3. Hastily; without delay or respite.

Unhappy offspring of my teeming womb!
Dragg'd headlong from thy cradle to thy tomb.

Dryden.

4. It is very negligently used by Shak- spears.

Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels,
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave. Shaksp.

HE'ADMOULD-SHOT. n. f. [from head, mould, and shot.] This is when the sutures of the skull, generally the coronal, ride; that is, have their edges shot over one another; which is frequent in infants, and occasions convulsions and death.

Quincy.

HE'ADPIECE. n. f. [from head and piece.]

1. Armour for the head; helmet; morion.

I pulled off my headpiece, and humbly entreated her pardon, or knowledge why she was cruel. Sidney.

The word is giv'n; with eager speed they lace
The shining headpiece, and the shield embrace.

Dryden.

A reason for this fiction of the one-eyed

Cyclops, was their wearing a headpiece, or martial visor, that had but one sight. Brown.

This champion will not come into the field,
before his great blunderbuss can be got ready,
his old rusty breakfast scoured, and his cracked headpiece mended. Swift.

2. Understanding; force of mind.

'Tis done by some severals
Of headpiece extraordinary, lower messes
Perchance are to this business purblind. Shaksp.

Eumenes had the best headpiece of all Alexander's captains. Prideaux.

HE'ADQUARTERS. n. f. [from head and quar- ters.] The place of general rendezvous, or lodgment for soldiers. This is properly two words.

Those spirits, posted upon the out-guards, immediately scour off to the brain, which is the headquarters, or office of intelligence, and there they make their report. Collier.

And headsmen lab'ring 'till they blunt their ax?

Dryden.

HE'ADSTALL. n. f. [from head and stall.] Part of the bridle that covers the head.

His horse, with a half-cheek'd bit, and a headstall of sheep's leather, which being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often built, and now repaired with knots. Shaksp.

HE'ADSTONE. n. f. [from head and stone.]
The first or capital stone.

The stone, which the builders refused, is become the headstone. Psalms.

HE'ADSTRONG. adj. [from head and strong.]
Unrestrained; violent; ungovernable;

resolute to run his own way; as a horse whose head cannot be held in.

An example, for headstrong and inconsiderate zeal, no less fearful than Achitophel for proud and irreligious wisdom. Hooker.

How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition. Shaksp.

But such a headstrong potent fault it is,
That it but mocks reproach. Shaksp.

He ill aspires to rule
Cities of men or headstrong multitudes,

Subject himself to anarchy within. Milton.

There's no opposing the torrent of a headstrong multitude. L'Estrange.

Now let the headstrong boy my will controul:
Virtue's no slave of man; no sex confines the soul.

I, for myself, th' imperial seat will gain,
And he shall wait my leisure for his reign. Dryd.

Your father's folly took a headstrong course;
But I'll rule yours, and teach you love by force.

Dryden.

Can we forget how the mad headstrong rout
Defy'd their prince to arms, nor made account

Of faith or duty, or allegiance sworn? Philips.

I'll try if yet I can reduce to reason
This headstrong youth, and make him spurn at Cato. Addison.

You'll be both judge and party: I am sorry thou discover'st so much of thy headstrong humour. Arbutnot.

HE'ADWORKMAN. n. f. [from head, work, and man.] The foreman, or chief servant over the rest. Properly two words.

Can Wood be otherwise regarded than as the mechanick, the headworkman, to prepare furnace and stamps? Swift.

HE'ADY. adj. [from head.]1. Rash; precipitate; hasty; violent; ungovernable; hurried on with passion.

Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet the cool and temperate wind of grace

O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murther, spoil, and villany. Shaksp.

I am advised what I say:
Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
Nor, heady rash, provok'd with raging ire;
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.

Shaksp.

I'll forbear,
And am fall'n out with my more heady will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the sound man. Shaksp.

Wives, the readiest helps
To betray heady husbands, rob the easy.

Ben Jonson.

Those only are regarded who are true to their party; and all the talent required is to be hot, to be heady, to be violent on one side or other.

Temple.

Men, naturally warm and heady, are transported with the greatest flush of good-nature.

Addison.

2. Apt to affect the head.

I was entertained with a sort of wine which was very heady, but otherwise seem'd to be sack.

Boyle.

Since hearty beef and mutton will not do,
Here 's julep-dance, pifan of song and show:
Give you strong sense, the liquor is too heady;
You're come to farce, that 's asses milk, already.

Dryden.

Flow, Wellst! flow, like thine inspirer, hee;
Heady, not strong; and foaming, though not full.

Pope.

3. Violent; impetuous.

Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current scow'ring faults;
Nor ever hydra-headed witfulness
So soon did lose his seat. Shaksp.

To HEAL. v. a. [from hælan, Gothick; hælan, Saxon; heelen, Dutch.]1. To cure a person; to restore from hurt or sickness.

I will restore health, and heal thee of thy wounds. Jeremiah.

Who would not believe that our Saviour healed
the sick, and raised the dead, when it was published by those who themselves often did the same miracles? Addison.

Physicians, by just observations, grow up to an honourable degree of skill in the art of healing.

Harris.

2. To cure a wound or distemper.

Thou hast no healing medicines. Jeremiah.
A fontanel had been made in the same leg,

The husbandman returns from the field, and from manuring his ground, strong and healthy, because innocent and laborious. South.

Temperance, industry, and a publick spirit, running through the whole body of the people in Holland, hath preferred an infant commonwealth of a sickly constitution, through so many dangers, as a much more healthy one could never have struggled against without those advantages.
Swift.

Air and exercise contribute to make the animal healthy. Arbuthnot.

2. Conducive to health; wholesome.

Gardening or husbandry, and working in wood, are fit and healthy recreations for a man of study or business. Locke.

Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
Lies dumb'ring fullen in the white abyss.
Thomson.

TO HEAR. v. n. [hýpan, Saxon; hooren, Dutch.]

1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.

Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external ear, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum: in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum: so that, according to the various reflexions of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of hearing; and these different impressions represent different sounds. Quincy.

The object of hearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence. Holder.

Princes cannot see far with their own eyes,
nor hear with their own ears. Temple.

2. To listen; to hearken: as, he heard with great attention.

So spake our mother Eve, and Adam heard,
Well-pleas'd, but answer'd not. Milton.

Great laughter was in heav'n,
And looking down, to see the hubbub strange,
And hear the din. Milton.

3. To be told; to have an account: with of.

I have heard by many of this man. Acts.
I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the feeling of it. Hofea.

Hear of such a crime
As tragick poets, since the birth of time, Ne'er feign'd. Pope's Juvenal.

This, of eldest parents, leaves us more in the dark, who, by divine institution, has a right to civil power, than those who never heard any thing at all of heir or descent. Locke.

TO HEAR. v. n.

1. To perceive by the ear.

The trumpeters and fingers were as one sound to be heard in praising the Lord. 2 Chronicles.
And sure he heard me, but he would not hear.
Dryden.

2. To give an audience, or allowance to speak.

He sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ. Acts.

Or hear'st thou rather pure ethereal stream,
Whose fountain who shall tell? Milton.
Hear'st thou submissive, but a lowly birth? Prior.

HEARD signifies a keeper, and is sometimes initial; as beard-beart, a glorious keeper: sometimes final, as cynheard, a royal keeper. Gibson's Camden. It is now written berd: as, cowheard, a cow-keeper; hýnd, Saxon.

HEARER. n. f. [from hear.]

1. One who hears.

And to was the dulled withal, that we could come so near as to hear her speeches, and yet she not perceive the hearers of her lamentation. Silvius.

St. John and St. Matthew, which have recorded these sermons, heard them; and being hearers, did think themselves as well respected as the pharisees. Hooker.

5 X

Words, be they never so few, are too many, when they benefit not the hearer. Hooker.

The hearers will shed tears

And say, Alas! it was a piteous deed! Shaksp.

The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from excess of suitors. Shaksp.
He hearkens after prophecies and dreams. Shaksp.

They do me too much injury,
That ever said I hearken'd for your death:

If it were so, I might have let alone
Th' insulting hand of Douglas over you. Shaksp.

The gaping three-mouth'd dog forgets to snarl,
The furies hearken and their snakes uncurl. Dryden.

Louder and yet more loud I hear the alarms
Of human cries:

I mount the terras, thence the town survey,
And hearken what the fruitful fountains convey. Dryden.

He who makes much necessary, will want much; and, wearied with the difficulty of the attainment, will hearken after any expedient that offers to shorten his way to it. Rogers.

2. To attend; to pay regard.

Hearken unto me thou son of Zippor. Numb.
Those who put passion in the place of reason, neither use their own, nor hearken to other people's reason; any farther than it suits their humour. Locke.

There's not a blessing individuals find,
But some way leads and hearken to the kind. Pope.

HE'ARKENER. n. f. [from hearken.]

Listener; one that hearkens.

HE'ARSAY. n. f. [hear and say.] Report; rumour; what is not known otherwise than by account from others.

HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth; meanly born.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain,
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shakspeare.

HEDGE-CREEPER. n. f. [hedge and creep.]

One that skulks under hedges for bad purposes.

HEDGE-PUMITORY. n. f. A plant; sumaria sepium. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HOG. n. f. [hedge and hog; erinaceus.]

1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in a hedge.

Like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their backs at my foot-fall. Shakspeare.

Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience, the collyrium of Albertus; that is to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brass vessel, effect. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under part, head, belly and legs, within his thickest of prickles. Ray.

1. To raise higher.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

3. To aggravate.

Foreign States used their endeavours to heighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evils of a civil war. Addison.

4. To improve by decorations.

As in a room, contriv'd for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the axes; so in the heightenings of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion. Dryden.

HE'INOUS. adj. [haineux, French, from banc, hate; or from the Teutonick, boen, shame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree.

To abrogate or innovate the gospel of Christ, if men or angels should attempt, it were most heinous and accursed sacrilege. Hooker.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakspeare.

As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us. Tillotson.

HE'INOUSLY. adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.

HE'INOUSNESS. n. f. [from heinous.] Atrociousness; wickedness.

He who can treat offences, provoking God, as jests and trifles, must have little sense of the heinousness of them. Rogers.

HEIR. n. f. [heire, old French; heres, Latin.]

1. One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

An heir signifies the eldest, who is, by the laws of England, to have all his father's land. Locke.

—The heir of Alanfon, Rosaline her name. Shaksp.

HEL

HEL

That I'll give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent,
God knows, I will not do it. Shakespeare.
Being here together of the grace of life. Pet.
Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost,
And I his heir in misery alone. Pope.
The heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions. Swift.

1. The newly inheriting an estate.

The young extravagant heir had got a new reward, and was refused to look into his estate.
Swift.

To HEIR. v. a. [from the noun.] To inherit.

His son in blooming youth was snatch'd by fate,
One only daughter he'd the royal state. Dryden.

HEIRESS. n. f. [from heir.] An inheritrix; a woman that inherits.

An heiress she, while yet alive;
All that was her's to him did give. Waller.

Reas, though he married the heiress of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law. Dryden.

HEIRLESS. adj. [from heir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.

I still think of
The wrong I did myself; which was so much,
That heirless it hath made my kingdom. Shaksp.

HEIRLOOM. n. f. [heir and teloma, goods, Saxon.] Any furniture or moveable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inseparable from the freehold.

Achilles' sceptre was of wood,
Transmitted to the hero's line;
Thence through a long descent of kings
Came an heirloom, as Homer sings. Swift.

HEIRSHIP. n. f. [from heir.] The state, character, or privileges of an heir.

A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will, to build an hospital within a year, under pain of being deprived of his heirship. Ayliffe.

A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends. Ecclesiastes.

If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand, he had executed his design. Dryden.

HELIAL. adj. [belique, Fr. from helios.] Emerging from the lustre of the sun, or falling into it.

Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its helial ascent. Brown.

HELIACALLY. adv. [from heliacal.]

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emergence from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular days. Brown.

He is tempestuous in the summer, when he rises heliacally; and rainy in the winter, when he rises achronically. Dryden.

HELICAL. adj. [belice, Fr. from helix.] Spiral; with many circumvolutions.

The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a velocity at one end of it. Wilkins.

HELIOCENTRIC. adj. [heliocentrique, French; helios and centre.]

The heliocentric place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun,
if our eye were fixed in its centre. Harris.

HELIOD Parabola in mathematicks, or the parabolick spiral, is a curve which arises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge toward the centre of the said circle. Harris.

HELIOSCOPE. n. f. [helioscope, Fr. helios and scope.] A sort of telescope fitted so as to look on the body of the sun, without offence to the eyes. Harris.

HELIOTROPE. n. f. [helios and tropos; heliotrope, Fr. heliotropium, Lat.] A plant that turns toward the sun; but more particularly the turnfol, or sunflower.

'Tis an observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night, and in cloudy weather. Gou. of the Tongue.

HELISPHERICAL. adj. [helix and sphere.]

The helihspherical line is the rhomb line in navigation, and is so called because on the globe it winds round the pole spirally, and still comes nearer and nearer to it, but cannot terminate in it.
Harris.

HELIX. n. f. [belice, Fr. helix.] Part of a spiral line; a circumvolution.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the quantity of water which every helix does contain. Wilkins.

1. The female of a house-cock.

2. The female of any land fowl.

The peacock, pheasant, and goldfinch cocks have glorious colours; the hens have not. Bacon.

Whilst the hen bird is covering her eggs, the male generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough within her hearing, and by that means diverts her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Addison.

O'er the trackless waste
The heath hen dusters. Thomson.

HEN-DRIVER. n. f. [hen and driver.] A kind of hawk.

The hen-driver I forbear to name. Walton.

HEN-HARM. } n. f. [pygargus.] A

HEN-HARRIER. } kind of kite. Ainslie.

So called probably from destroying chickens.

HEN-WEARTE. adj. [hen and heart.] Dastardly; cowardly; like a hen. A low word.

HEN-PECKED. adj. [hen and pecked.] Governed by the wife.

A steedman too I have, a cursed she,
Whom rules my hen-peck'd fire, and orders me. Dry.
The neighbours reported that he was hen-peck'd, which was impossible, by such a maid spirited woman as his wife. Airbuthnot.

HEN-ROOST. n. f. [hen and roost.] The place where the poultry rest.

Many a poor devil stands to a whipping post for the pilfering of a silver spoon, or the robbing of a hen-roost. L'Estrange.

Her house is frequented by a company of rogues, whom she encourageth to rob his hen-roosts. Swift.

If a man prosecutes gipsies with severity, his hen-roost is sure to pay for it. Addison.

They off have tally'd out to pillage
The hen-roosts of some peaceful village. Tickel.

HEPHEANE. n. f. [hyofeyamus, Latin.] A plant.

It is very often found growing upon the sides of banks and old dunghills. This is a very poisonous plant. Miller.

That to which old Socrates was cur'd,
Or hebane juice, to swell 'em 'till they burst. Dryden.

HE'NBIT. n. f. [alfine solis bederacis.] A plant.

In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its raining millet-feed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small hebit. Durham's Phys. Theolog.

HEN

HENCE. adv. or interj. [heonan, Sax. benner, old English.]

1. From this place to another.

Discharge my follow'rs; let them hence away,
From Richard's night to Bolingbroke's fair day.
Shakespeare.

Th' Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy; will not drive us hence. Milton.
A fallen prudence drew thee hence
From noise, fraud, and impertinence. Reform.

2. Away; to a distance. A word of command.

Be not found here: hence with your little ones.
Shakespeare.

Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse. Milton.

3. At a distance; in another place. Not in use.

Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth?
Shakespeare.

All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are infixed to this action. Shakespeare.

4. From this time; in the future.

He who can reason well to-day about one sort of matters, cannot at all reason to-day about others, though perhaps a year hence he may. Locke.
Let not posterity a thousand years hence look for truth in the voluminous annals of pedants.
Arbutnot.

5. For this reason; in consequence of this.

Hence perhaps it is, that Solomon calls the fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom.
Tillotson.

6. From this cause; from this ground.

By too strong a projectile motion the aliment tends to putrefaction; hence may be deduced the force of exercise in helping digestion. Arbutnot.

7. From this source; from this original; from this store.

My Flora was my sun; for as One sun, so but one Flora was;
All other faces borrowed hence
Their light and grace as stars do thence. Suckling.

8. From hence is a vitious expression, which crept into use even among good authors, as the original force of the word hence was gradually forgotten. Hence signifies from this.

An ancient author prophesied from hence,
Behold on Latian shores a foreign prince! Dryden.

To HENCE. v. a. [from the adverb.]

To send off; to dispatch to a distance.
Obsolete.

So, bawling cur! thy hungry maw go fill
On yon foul flock, belonging not to me;
With that his dog he hence'd, his flock he curs'd.
Sidney.

HENCEFORTH. adv. [henonponð, Sax.]

From this time forward.

Thanes and knifemen,
Henceforth be carls. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never, oh never, shall I see more joy. Shakespeare.
Happier thou may'st be, worthier can'st not be;
Taste this, and be henceforth among the gods,
Thyself a goddess. Milton.

I never from thy side henceforth will stray,
Till day droop. Milton.

If we treat gallant soldiers in this sort,
Who then henceforth to our defence will come?
Dryden.

HENCEFORWARD. adv. [hence and for-ward.] From this time to futurity.

Henceforward will I bear
Upon my target three fair shining suns. Shakespeare.

Pardon, I beseech you;
Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you. Shakespeare.

The royal academy will admit henceforward
only such who are endued with good qualities.
Dryden.

HER

HERCHMAN. n. f. [hync, a servant, and man, Skinner; henzr, a horse, and man, Spelman.] A page; an attendant. Obsolete.

Why should Titania cross her Oberon:
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my herchman. Shakespeare.

Three herchmen were for ev'ry knight allign'd,
All in rich livery clad, and of a kind. Dryden.

To HEND. v. a. [henban, Saxon, from hendo, low Latin, which seems borrowed from band or bond, Teutonic.]

1. To seize; to lay hold on.

With that the sergeants hent the young man stout,
And bound him likewise in a worthless chain.
Fairfax.

2. To crowd; to surround. Perhaps the following passage is corrupt, and should be read hemmed; or it may mean to take possession.

The generous and gravest citizens
Have hent the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering. Shakespeare.

HENDE'CAGON. n. f. [indica and gamma.]

A figure of eleven sides or angles.

HEPA'TICAL. } adj. [hepaticus, Lat. hepa-

HEPA'TICK. } lique, Fr. from ήπαρ.]

Belonging to the liver.

If the evacuated blood be florid, it is stomach blood; if red and copious, it is hepatick. Harvey.

The cystick gall is thick, and intensely bitter;
the hepatick gall is more fluid, and not so bitter.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

HERBS. n. f. The berries of the brier or dogrose, commonly written hips. Ainsw.
In hard winters there is observed great plenty of heps and haws, which preserve the small birds from starving. Bacon.

HEPTACA'PSULAR. adj. [ήπτα and capsu- la.] Having seven cavities or cells.

HEPTAGON. n. f. [heptagone, French; ήπτα and γωνία.] A figure with seven sides or angles.

HEPTA'GONAL. adj. [from heptagon.]
Having seven angles or sides.

HEPTARCHY. n. f. [heptarchie, French;
ήπτα and αρχή.] A sevenfold government.

In the Saxon heptarchy I find little noted of arms, albeit the Germans, of whom they descended, used shields. Camden.

England began not to be a people, when Alfred reduced it into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The next returning planetary hour

Of Mars, who shar'd the heptarchy of pow'r,

His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent. Dryden.

HER. pron. [hepa, hep, in Saxon, stood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in the ears, approach'd
The opening of his mouth. Shakespeare. As you like it.

Still new favourites the chafe,
'Till up in arms my passion rose,

And call away her yoke. Cowley.

One month, three days, and half an hour,
Judith held the sov'reign pow'r;

Wood'rous beautiful her face;
But to weak and small her wit,

That she to govern were unfit,
And so Susanna took her place. Cowley.

HER

2. The oblique case of she.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not. Shakespeare. Henry v.
She cannot seem deform'd to me,
And I would have her seem to others so. Cowley.
The moon arose clad o'er in light,
With thousand stars attending on her train;
With her they rise, with her they set again.
Cowley.

Should I be left, and thou be lost, the sea,
That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryden.

HERS. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms as hers.

This pride of hers,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her.
Shakespeare.

Thine own unworthiness,
Will still that thou art mine not hers confess.
Cowley.

Some secret charm did all her acts attend,
And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend.
Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
Indeed to save a crown, not hers but yours. Dryden.

HERALD. n. f. [herault, Fr. herald,
German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace.

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my look,
For strict degrees of rank or title look;
'Tis 'gainst the manners of an epigram,
And I a poet here, no herald am. Ben Jonson.

When time shall serve let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Embassador of peace, if peace you chuse;
Or herald of a war, if you refuse. Dryden.

Please thy pride and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree.
Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinger.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakespeare.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn.
Shakespeare.

3. A proclaimer; a publisher.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
But such an honest chronicler as Grimb. Shakespeare.

To HERALD. v. a. [from the noun.]

To introduce as by a herald. Not used.

We are sent from our royal master,
Only to herald thee into his fight,
Not pay thee. Shakespeare.

HERALDRY. n. f. [heraulderie, Fr. from herald.]

1. The art or office of a herald.

I am writing of heraldry. Peacham.

Grant her, besides, of noble blood that ran
In ancient veins, ere heraldry began. Dryden.

2. Registry of genealogies.

'Twas no false heraldry when madness drew
Her pedigree from those who too much knew.
Danham.

3. Blazonry.

Metals may blazon common beauties; she Makes pearls and planets humble heraldry.
Beaumont.

HERB. n. f. [herbe, Fr. herba, Latin.]

Herbs are those plants whose stalks are soft, and have nothing woody in them; as grass and hemlock. Locke.

In such a night
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs
That aid reaw old Æson. Shakespeare.

HER

HER

HER

With sweet-smelling herbs
 Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed. Milt.
 Unhappy, from whom still conceal'd does lie
 Of herbs, and roots the harmless luxury. Cowley.
 If the leaves are of chief use to us, then we call them herbs; as sage and mint. Watts.
 Herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbuthnot.
HERB Christopher, or bane-berries. n. f.
 A plant.
HERBACEOUS. adj. [from herba, Lat.]
 1. Belonging to herbs.
 Ginger is the root of neither tree nor trunk;
 but an herbaceous plant, resembling the water flower-de-luce. Brown.
 2. Feeding on vegetables: perhaps not properly.
 Their teeth are fitted to their food, the rapacious to catching, holding, and tearing their prey; the herbaceous to gathering and comminution of vegetables. Derham.
HERBAGE. n. f. [herbage, French.]
 1. Herbs collectively; grafs; pasture.
 Rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow;
 Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields.
Dryden.
 At the time the deluge came, the earth was loaded with herbage, and thronged with animals. Woolward.
 2. The tithe and the right of pasture.
Ainsworth.
HERBAL. n. f. [from herb.] A book containing the names and descriptions of plants.
 We leave the description of plants to herbals,
 and other like books of natural history. Bacon.
 Such a plant will not be found in the herbal of nature. Brown.
 As for the medicinal uses of plants, the large herbals are ample testimonies thereof. Moore.
 Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants.
Baker.
HERBALIST. n. f. [from herbal.] A man skilled in herbs.
Herbalists have distinguished them, naming that the male whose leaves are lighter, and fruit rounder. Brown.
HERBAR. n. f. [A word, I believe,
 only to be found in Spenser.] Herb;
 plant.
 The roof hereof was arch'd over head,
 And deck'd with flowers and herbars daintly.
Fairy Queen
HERBARIST. n. f. [herbarius, from herba, Latin.] One skilled in herbs.
Herbarists have exercised a commendable curiosity in subdividing plants of the same denomination. Earle.
 He was too much sway'd by the opinions then current amongst herbarists, that different colours, or multiplicity of leaves in the flower, were sufficient to constitute a specific difference. Roy.
 As to the fuci, their seed hath been discovered and shew'd me first by an ingenious herbarist.
Derham.
HERBELET. n. f. [diminutive of herb,
 or of herbula, Latin.] A small herb.
 These herbelets, which we upon you strow.
Shakespeare.
HERBESCENT. adj. [herbescens, Latin.]
 Growing into herbs.
HERBID. adj. [herbidus, Latin.] Covered with herbs.
HERBORIST. n. f. [from herb.] One curious in herbs. This seems a mistake for herbarist.
 A curious herborist has a plant, whose flower perishes in about an hour. Roy.
HERBOROUGH. n. f. [herberg, German.] Place of temporary residence. Now written harbours.

The German lord, when he went out of Newgate into the east, took order to have his arms set up in his last herborough. Ben Jonson.
HERBOUS. adj. [herbosus, Lat.] Abounding with herbs.
HERBULENT. adj. [from herbula, Lat.]
 Containing herbs. Diët.
HERBWOMAN. n. f. [herb and woman.]
 A woman that sells herbs.
 I was like to be pulled to pieces by brewer, butcher, and baker; even my herbwoman dunn'd me as I went along. Arbuthnot.
HERBY. adj. [from herb.] Having the nature of herbs.
 No substance but earth, and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any morsel of herby substance. Bacon.
HERD. n. f. [heorð, Saxon.]
 1. A number of beasts together. It is peculiarly applied to black-cattle.
Flocks and herds are sheep and oxen or kine.
 Note a wild and wanton herd,
 Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
 Fetching mad bounds. Shakespeare.
 There find a herd of heifers, wand'ring o'er
 The neighbouring hill, and drive them to the shore.
Addison.
 2. A company of men, in contempt or detestation.
 Survey the world, and where one Cato shines,
 Count a degenerate herd of Catilines. Dryden.
 I do not remember where ever God deliver'd His oracles by the multitude, or nature truth by the herd. Locke.
 3. It antiently signified a keeper of cattle, and in Scotland it is still used. [hyrd, Saxon.] A sense still retained in composition: as, goat-herd.
TO HERD. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To run in herds or companies.
 Weak women should, in danger, herd like deer.
Dryden.
 It is the nature of indigency, like common danger, to endear men to one another, and make them herd together, like fellow-sailors in a storm.
Norris.
 2. To associate; to become one of any number or party.
 I'll herd among his friends, and seem
 One of the number. Addison's Cato
 Run to towns, to herd with knaves and fools,
 And undistinguish'd pass among the crowd.
Walf.
TO HERD. v. a. To throw or put into a herd.
 The rest,
 However great we are, honest and valiant,
 Are herd with the vulgar. Ben Jonson.
HERDGROOM. n. f. [herd and groom.]
 A keeper of herds. Not in use.
 But who shall judge the wager won or lost?
 That shall yonder herdgroom, and none other.
Spenser.
HERDMAN. } n. f. [herd and man.]
HERDSMAN. } One employed in tending herds: formerly, an owner of herds.
 A herdsman rich, of much account was he,
 In whom no evil did reign, or good appear.
Sidney.
 And you, enchantment,
 Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou
 These rural latches to his entrance open,
 I will devise a cruel death for thee. Shakespeare.
 Scarce themselves know how to hold
 A sheephook, or have learn'd ought else the least
 That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs.
Milton.
 There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
 Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds
 As loop-holes cut through thickest shade. Milt.

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear
 Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear.
Dryden.
 The herdsman, round
 The cheerful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd. Dryden.
 When their herdsman could not agree, they parted by consent. Locke.
HERE. adv. [hest, Saxon; hier, Dutch.]
 1. In this place.
 Before they here approach,
 Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
 All ready at a point, was setting forth. Shaksp.
 I, upon my frontiers here,
 Keep residence. Milton.
Here nature first begins
 Her farthest verge. Milton.
 How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,
 While he his second misery suffers here! Cowley.
 To day here ours, we have it here. Cowley.
 2. In the present state.
 Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Baron.
 3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.
 Then here 's for earnest:
 'Tis finish'd. Dryden.
 4. In drinking a health.
Here 's to thee, Dick.
 However, friend, here 's to the king, one cries;
 To him who was the king, the friend replied.
Prior.
 5. It is often oppos'd to there; in one place, distinguished from another.
 Good-night, mine eyes do itch;
 Doth that bode weeping?
 —'Tis neither here nor there. Shaksp.
 We are come to see thee fight, to see thee foigne, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shaksp.
 Then this, then that man's aid, they crave,
 implore;
 Post here for help, seek there their followers.
Daniel.
 I would have in the heath some thickets made only of sweet-briar, and honey-suckle, and some wild vine amongst; and the ground set with violets; for these are sweet, and prosper in the shade; and these to be in the heath here and there, not in order. Bacon.
 The devil might perhaps, by inward suggestions, have drawn in here and there a single profelyte.
 Your city, after the dreadful fire, was rebuilt, not presently, by raising continued streets; but at first here a house, and there a house, to which others by degrees were joined. Speat's Sermons.
 He that rides post through a country may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain and there a plain, here a moor and there a river, woodland in one part, and savannas in another. Locke.
 6. Here seems, in the following passage, to mean this place.
 Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;
 Thou lovest here, a better where to find. Shaksp.
HEREABOUTS. adv. [here and about.]
 About this place.
 I saw hereabouts nothing remarkable, except Agastus's bridge. Addison on Italy.
HEREAFTER. adv. [here and after.]
 1. In time to come; in futurity.
 How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shaksp.
 The grand-child, with twelve sons increas'd, departs
 From Canaan, to a land hereafter call'd Egypt. Milton.
Hereafter he from war shall come,
 And bring his Trojans peace. Dryden.
 2. In a future state.
 You shall be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.

HEREAFTER. n. f. A future state. This is a figurative noun, not to be used but in poetry.

'Tis the divinity that first within us;
'Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Adelphi's Care.
I still shall wait

Some new hereafter, and a future state. Prior.

HERET. adv. [here and at.] At this. One man coming to the tribune, to receive his denative, with a garland in his hand, the tribune, offended heret, demanded what this singularity could mean? Hooker.

HEREBY. adv. [here and by.] By this. In what estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is not hereby either one way or other determined. Hooker.

Herby the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours. Brown.

The acquisition of truth is of infinite concernment: hereby we become acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.

HEREDITABLE. adj. [heres, Lat.] What-ever may be occupied as inheritance.

Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditary, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's. Locke.

HEREDITAMENT. n. f. [hereditum, Lat.] A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.

HEREDITARILY. adv. [from hereditary.] By inheritance.

Here is another, who thinks one of the greatest glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditary. Pope to Swift.

HEREDITARY. adj. [hereditaire, Fr. hereditarius, Lat.] Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.

To thee and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shakespeare.

These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary. Shakespeare.

He shall ascend
The throne hereditary, and bound his reign
With earth's wide bounds, his glory with the heavens. Milton.

Thus while the mute creation downward bend
Their sight, and to their earthly mother tend,
Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden's Ovid.
When heroick verse his youth shall raise,
And form it to hereditary praise. Dryden's Virgil.

HEREIN. adv. [here and in.] In this. How highly fewer it may please them with words of oath to extol sermons, they that not herein offend us. Hooker.

My best endeavours shall be done herein. Shakespeare.

Since truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

HEREINTO. adv. [here and into.] Into this.

Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance herein cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general. Hooker.

HERETO. adv. [here and of.] From this; of this.

Heret comes it that prince Harry is valiant. Shakespeare.

HERETO. adv. [here and on.] Upon this. If we should strictly insist herein, the possibility might fall into question. Brown's Eng. Err.

HERETO. adv. [here and out.]

1. Out of this place.

A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing,
Heret-out up to the throne of God did fly. Spenser.

2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except hereafter, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.

HERMITICAL. adj. [It should be written heremital, from heremite, of herem, a desert; heremique, French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.

You describe so well your heremital state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for a cave in a rock. Pope.

HERESARCH. n. f. [heresiarque, French; ἡρῆσαρχος, Greek.] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of heretics.

The pope declared him not only an heretic, but an heresarch. Stirlingfleet.

HERESY. n. f. [heresie, French; heresis, Latin; ἡρῆσις, Greek.] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholic and orthodox church.

Heresy prevails only by a counterfeit shew of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remembrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hooker.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon men's wits; yet do not produce great alterations in states. Bacon.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and dissuality. King Charles.

HERETICK. n. f. [heretique, French; ἡρῆτικὸς, Greek.]

1. One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholic church.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretic or schismatic be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No heretick desire to spread
Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.
Bellarmine owns, that he has quoted a heretic instead of a father. Baker on Learning.

When a papist uses the word heretic, he generally means protestants; when a protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errors. Watts.

2. It is or has been used ludicrously for any one whose opinion is erroneous.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold
Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands,
In him that was of late an heretic,
As firm as faith. Shakespeare.

HERETICAL. adj. [from heretic.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as teaching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who, in their opinion, not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Ducy of Pitty.

HERETICALLY. adv. [from heretical.] With heresy.

HERETO. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERETOFORE. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly; anciently.

I have long desired to know you heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love not your person. Sidney.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South.

We now can form no more Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HEREUNTO. adv. [here and unto.] To this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man heretofore is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that whose affinity to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hooker.

Agreeable heretofore might not be amiss to make children often to tell a story of any thing they know. Locke.

HEREWITH. adv. [here and with.] With this.

You, fair sir, be not herewith dismay'd,
But constant keep the way in which ye stand. Spenser.

Herewith the castle of Hame was suddenly surprised by the Scots. Hayward.

HERIOT. n. f. [herexilo, Saxon.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, commonly the best thing in the landholder's possession.

This he derives from the ivy; for he should be the true possessor lord thereof, but the olive dispossesseth with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year. Howell.

Though thou consume but to renew,
Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due. Cleveland.

I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a purse to you. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

HERITABLE. adj. [heres, Lat.] Capable to inherit whatever may be inherited.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England. Hale's Common Laws.

HERITAGE. n. f. [heritage, French.]

1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.

Let us our father's heritage divide. Hub. Tale.
He considers that his proper home and heriotage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this with the indifference of a guest that carries but a day. Rogers.

2. [In divinity.] The people of God.

O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heriotage. Common Prayer.

HERMAPHRODITE. n. f. [hermaphrodite, Fr. from hermas, and aphrodite.] An animal uniting two sexes.

Man and wife make but one right Canonical hermaphrodite. Cleveland.

Monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness hermaphrodites. Arbuth. & Pope.

HERMAPHRODITICAL. adj. [from hermaphrodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radically of different forms. Brown.

HERMETICAL. } adj. [from Hermes, HERMETICK. } or Mercury, the imagined inventor of chymistry; hermetique, French.] Chymical.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass 'till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together. Quincy.

The tube was closed at one end with diaphylon, instead of an hermetical seal. Park.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chymical art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels close covered with paper; and not only so, but in vessels covered the lawn, so as to admit the air, and keep out the insects; no living thing was ever produced there. Bentley.

HERMIT. n. f. [hermite, French; contracted from eremite, eremite.]

1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A wither'd hermit, fiftyscore winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shaksp.
You lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can tender.

He had been duke of Savoy, and, after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot. Addison.

2. A headman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.

For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits. Shaksp.

HERMITAGE. n. f. [hermitage, French.]

The cell or habitation of a hermit.
By that painful way they pass Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;
On top whereof a sacred chapel was,
And like a little hermitage thereby. Fairy Queen.
Go with speed
To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hazy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly tell
Of ev'ry thing that heav'n doth do,
And ev'ry herb that sips the dew. Milton.

About two leagues from Fishbourg we went to see a hermitage: it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks. Addison.

HERMITESS. n. f. [from hermit.] A woman retired to devotion.

HERMITICAL. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

HERMODACTYL. n. f. [ἡρμώδης, and δάκτυλος.]

Hermodactyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots are a gentle purge, now little used. Hill.

HERN. n. f. [contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, hern, and bittern. Pearson.

HERNHILL. n. f. [hern and hill.] An herb. Ainsworth.

HERNIA. n. f. [Latin.] Any kind of rupture, diversified by the name of the part affected.

A hernia would certainly succeed. Wifeman.

HERO. n. f. [heros, Latin; ἥρως.]

1. A man eminent for bravery.

King of heros and of kings,
In mighty numbers mighty things. Cowley.
Heros in animated marble frown.
In this view he ceases to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue. Pope's Odyssey.
These are thy honours, not that here thy bust
Is mix'd with heros, or with kings thy dust. Pope.

2. A man of the highest class in any respect; as, a hero in learning.

HEROESS. n. f. [from hero; heroies, Lat.] A heroine; a female hero. Not in use.

In which were held, by sad disease,

Heroes and heroiss.

HEROICAL. adj. [from hero.] Besitting a hero; noble; illustrious; heroic.

Masurius was famous over all Asia for his heroical enterprises. Sidney.

Though you have courage in an heroical degree, I ascribe it to you as your second attribute. Dryden.

HEROICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of a hero; suitably to a hero.

Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney.

Free from all meaning, whether good or bad; And, in one word, heroically mad. Dryden.

HEROICK. adj. [from hero; heroique, Fr.]

1. Productive of heroes.

From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that heroick line. Shaksp.

2. Noble; suitable to a hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.

Not that which justly gives heroick name
To person, or to poem. Milton.

Virtue makes heroick virtue live,
But you can life to virtues give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes. Used of poetry.

Metnicks heroick poetry, 'till now,
Like some tantalluck fairy land did show.

I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the manes, the beginning, progress and successes of a most just and necessary war. Dryden.

An heroick poem is the greatest work which the foul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

HEROICKLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to a hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.

Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroickly hath finish'd
A life heroick. Milton.

HEROINE. n. f. [from hero; heroine, French.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heroess.

But inlorn worth, that fortune can controul,
New-strang, and stiffer bent her softer soul;
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

Then shall the British stage
More noble characters expose to view,
And draw her finish'd heroines from you. Addison.

HEROISM. n. f. [heroisme, French.] The qualities or character of a hero.

If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Broom.

HERON. n. f. [heron, French.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish.

So lords, with sport of flag and heron full,
Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull. Sidney.

The heron, when she soareth high, sheweth winds. Bacon.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hern.

The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,
Who terror bears upon his forring wing;
Let them on high the frighted hern survey,
And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.

HERONRY. } n. f. [from heron, com-

HERONSHAW. } monly pronounced hern- ry.] A place where herons breed.

They carry their load to a large heronry above three miles. Derham's Physico-Theology.

HERPES. n. f. [ἑρπης.] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pustularis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and exedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers. Quincy.

A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the access of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes exedens. Wifeman.

HERRING. n. f. [hareng, Fr. hering, Saxon.] A small sea fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, hering, mackerel, and cod. Carew.
Buy my hering fresh. Swift.

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers. See HER.

How came her eyes so bright? not with salt
tears;

If so, my eyes are oftner wash'd than hers. Shaksp.

Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers;
For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.

I see her rowling eyes;
And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries;
With words not hers, and more than human sound,
She makes th' obedient gho's peep trembling through the ground. Reverend.

HERSE. n. f. [herf, low Latin; supposed to come from herman, to praise.] This is likewise written herse; see HEARSE.

1. A temporary monument raised over a grave.

2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.

When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herse,
Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Rowson.

On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
And frequent herfes shall besiege your gates. Pope.

TO HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a herse.

I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would she were her'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin.

Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
The Grecians spitefully drew from the darts
the curse,

And her'd it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman.
The house is her'd about with a black wood,
Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree. Crafter.

HERSELF. pronoun.

1. A female individual, as distinguished from others.

The jealous o'er-worn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shaksp.

2. Being in her own power; mistress of her own thoughts.

The more she looks, the more her fears increase,
At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryden.

3. The oblique case of the reciprocal pronoun: as, she hurt herself.

The daughter of Pharaoh came down wash herself. Exodus.
She returned answer to herself. Judges.

HERSELIKE. adj. [herse and like.] Funereal; suitable to funerals.

Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herse-like airs as carols. Bacon.

TO HERV. v. a. [herman, Saxon, to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.

Thenot, now his the time of merry make,
Nor Pan to herve, nor with love to play;
Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked bay. Spenser.

Not were thy years green as now be mine,
Then wouldst thou learn to carol of love,
And hew with hymns thy last's glove. Spenser.
HE'SITANCY. n. f. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense.

The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals, exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped.
Boyle.

Some of them reasoned without doubt of hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to show that they believed their own reasonings.

To HE'SITATE. v. a. [hesito, Latin; hesiter, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.

A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Gre-cians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Pope.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HE'SITATION. n. f. [from hesitate.]

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.
I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitation of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each peniter. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Intermision of speech; want of volu-bility.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HEST. n. f. [hæst, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction. Obsolete, or written behest.

Thou dost assist the not deserver,
As him that doth thy lovely hefts despise. Spenser.
Thou wait a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hefts. Shakspeare.

HETEROCLITE. n. f. [heteroclite, Fr.
heteroclitum, Latin; ἑτεροκλίτης and κλίμα.]

1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect, or otherwise. Clarke.

The heteroclitic nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Watts.

2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.

HETEROCLITICAL. adj. [from heteroclitic.]
Deviating from the common rule.

In the mention of sins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown.

HETERODOX. adj. [heterodoxe, French; ἑτεροδοξ and δόξα.] Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.

Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar,
in others to heterodox tenets. Locke.

HETERODOX. n. f. An opinion peculiar.

Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated into the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HETEROGENEAL. adj. [heterogene, Fr.
ἑτερογενής and γενος.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.

Let the body adjacent and ambient be not commaterial, but merely heterogeneous towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon.

The light whose rays are all alike refrangible,
I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar. Newton.

HETEROGENEITY. n. f. [heterogenéité,
French, from heterogeneous.]

1. Opposition of nature; contrariety or dissimilitude of qualities.

2. Opposite or dissimilar part.

Guatatum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequestered into ashes and soot; whereas the same wood, distilled into a retort, does yield for other heterogeneities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water, and charcoal. Boyle.

HETEROGENEOUS. adj. [ἑτερογενής and γενος.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.

I have observed such heterogeneous bodies, which I found included in the mails of this sandstone. Woodward.

HETEROSCIANS. n. f. [ἑτεροσκοῖα and σκία.]

Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the tropic fall at noon always to the north.

To HEW. v. a. part. hewn or bewed.
[heapan, Saxon; hauwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut by blows with an edged instrument; to hack.

Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain
Spenser.

I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brow,
Or lose my arm for't. Shakspeare.
He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends.
Hayward.

One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Hayward.

2. To chop; to cut.

He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew.
Dryden.

3. To cut, as with an axe: with the particles down, when it signifies to fell;
up, to excavate from below; off, to separate.

He thit depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hew'd down oaks with rushes. Shakspeare.
Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny
wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.
Shakspeare.

Scarcely can I speak, my choler is so great:
Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint.
Shakspeare.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.
He from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of a huge bulk. Milton.
We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage.
Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe: with out.

Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed him out a sepulchre on high. Israh.
Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. King Charles.
This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks. Addison on Italy.

5. To form laboriously.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame;
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god. Dryden's Fables.
Next unto bricks are prefer'd the square hewn
stone. Mortimer.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new.

Pope to Swift.

HE'WER. n. f. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains.

Brown.

HEXAGON. n. f. [hexagone, French; ἑξάγων and γωνία.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXAGONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered. Brown.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal. Ray.

HEXAGONY. n. f. [from hexagon.] A

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonies, or sexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians?

Bramhall against Hobbes.

HEXAMETER. n. f. [ἑξάμετρον and μετρον.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroick. Dryden.

HEXANGULAR. adj. [ἑξάγωνος and angulus,
Latin.] Having six corners.

Hexangular sprigs or shoots of crystal. Woodw.

HE'XAPOD. n. f. [ἑξάποδος and πῶς.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapodi, from which the greater sort of beetles come, for that sort of hexapodi are eaten in America. Ray.

HEXASTICK. n. f. [ἑξάστιχον and στιχον.] A poem of six lines.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation: the contrary to the Latin hei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the town with peaceful lyric;
Then hey for praise and panegyrick. Prior.

HEY'DAY. interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolic and exultation, and sometimes of wonder.

Thou'lt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such heyday wit in praising him.
Shakspeare.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday! Hudibras.

HEY'DAY. n. f. A frolic; wildness.

At your age
The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment. Shakspeare.

HEYDEGIVES. n. f. A wild frolic dance. Obsolete.

But friendly fairies met with many graces,
And light-foot nymphs can chase the ling'ring night
With heydegives, and trimly trodden traces.
Spenser.

HIA'TION. n. f. [from hio, Latin.] The act of gaping.

Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open the camelion's mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HIA'TUS. n. f. [hiatus, Latin.]

1. An aperture; a gaping breach.

Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, wherby the abyss below opens into and communicates with it. Woodward.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.

HID

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself. Pope.

HIBERNAL. adj. [hibernus, Lat.] Belonging to the winter.

This star should rather manifest its warming power in the winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conjunction. Brown.

HICCIUS DOCCIUS. n. f. [Corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this, or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Bridewell dock,
At Westminster and Hick's hall;
And hiccus doccus play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
H' had been both friend and foe to crimes. Hudibras.

HICCO'UM. n. f. [bicken, Danish.] A convulsion of the stomach producing fobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an echo supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if he had the hiccough o'er and o'er. Clarend.
Sneezing cures the hiccough, and is profitable Unto women in hard labour. Brown.
If the stomach be hurt, singultus or hiccough follows. Wifeman.

To HICCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To fob with convulsion of the stomach.

To HIC'UP. v. n. [corrupted from hiccough.] To fob with a convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up,
Or, when I'm in a fit, to hiccup. Hudibras.

HICKWALL. } n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.

HICKWAY. } n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.

HID. } The part. pass. of hide.

Thus fame shall be achiev'd, renown on earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence hid. Milton.

Other hidden cause Left them superior. Milton.
Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night;
God said, Let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

To HIDE. v. a. pret. hid; part. pass. hid or hidden. [hiban, Sax.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Avant, and quit my fight; let the earth hide thee! Shaksp.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shaksp.

Nile hears him knocking at his sev'nfold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nepew's fates. Dryden.

Thus the fire of gods and men below;
What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.

The sev'n parts lay hidden in the piece;
Th' occasion but extorted that, or this. Dryden.

Then for my cups a homely grave provide,
Which love and me from publick scorn may hide. Dryden.

Seas hid with navies, chariots passing o'er
The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryden.

With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such unexhausted sources of perfection? Adelphi.

The crazy being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Adelphi.

HID

Hell trembles at the sight, and hides its head
In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart Is fill'd with peace. Roscoe's Royal Convert.

To HIDE. v. n. To lie hid; to be concealed.

A fox, hard run, begged of a countryman to help him to some hiding place. L'Estrange.

Our bolder talents in full view display'd;
Your virtues open fairest in the shade:

Beed to disguise, in publick 'tis you hide,
Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride, Pope.

HIDE and SEEK. n. f. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in ray hair. Gulliver.

HIDE. n. f. [hyde, Sax. baude, Dut.]

1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.

The trembling weapon pit
Through nine bull hides each under other plac'd
On his broad shield. Dryden.

Pitistratus was first to grasp their hands,
And spread soft hides upon the yellow sands. Pope.

2. The human skin: in contempt.

Oh, tiger's heart, wrapt in a woman's hide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child? Shaksp.

His mantle, now his hide, with rugged hairs
Cleaves to his back; a famish'd face he bears. Dryden.

3. A certain quantity of land. [Hide, byde, French; bida, barbarous Latin,
as much as one plough can till.] Ainsw.

One of the first things was a more particular inquisition than had been before of every hide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Watson.

HIDEBOUND. adj. [hide and bound.]

1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from overriding, or a surfeit. Farrier's Dict.

2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.

A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it.
Bacon's Natural History.

Like fainted hidebound trees, that just have got sufficient sap at once to beat and rot. Swift.

3. Harsh; untractable.

And still the harther and hidebound
The damfels prove, become the fonder. Hadib.

4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious.

HIDE'OUS. adj. [bideus, French.]

1. Horrible; dreadful; shocking.

If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hideous. Sidney.

Some monster in thy thoughts,
Too hideous to be shown. Shaksp.

I fled, and cry'd out death!
Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back rebounded death. Milton.

Her eyes grew stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn;
Her hideous looks and hellish form return;
Her curling snakes with hissing fill the place,
And open all the furies of her face. Dryden.

2. It is commonly used of risible objects:

the following use is less authorized.

'Tis forced through the hiatuses at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it

HIE

rage and roar with a most *hi*rious and amazing noise. Woodward's Natural Hist.

3. It is used by Spenser in a sense not now retained; detestable.

O hideous hanger of dominion! Spenser.

HIDE'OUSLY. adv. [from bideous.] Hor-ribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.

I arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shaksp.

This, in the present application, is hideously
profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier.

HIDE'OUSNESS. n. f. [from bideous.]
Horribleness; dreadfulness; terror.

HIDE. n. f. [from the verb.] He that hides.

To HIE. v. n. [hiegan, Saxon.]

1. To hasten; to go in haste.

When they had mark'd the changed skies,
They wist their hour was spent; then each to rest him hies. Fairy Queen.

My will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed. Shak.

Well, I will hie,
And to bestow these papers as you bade me. Shaksp.

Some to the shores do fly,
Some to the woods, or whither fear advis'd;
But running from, all to destruction hie. Daniel.

The snake no sooner hiss'd,
But virtue heard it, and away she hied. Croshaw.

Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a cur'd hour, he hies. Milton.

Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree
Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sea. Waller.

The youth, returning to his mistress, hies. Dryden.

2. It was anciently used with or without the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.

Auster spy'd him;
Cruel Auster, thither hy'd him. Croshaw.

HIERARCH. n. f. [hieros and arche; hie- rarche, French.] The chief of a sacred order.

Angels, by imperial summons call'd,
Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
Under their hierarchs in orders bright. Milton.

HIERARCHICAL. adj. [hierarchie, Fr.]
Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

HIERARCHY. n. f. [hierarchie, French.]

1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings.

Out of the hierarchies of angels chosen,
The gentle Gabriel call'd be from the rest. Fairfax.

He sounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Denne.

Jehovah, from the summit of the sky,
Environ'd with his winged hierarchs,
The world survey'd. Sandys.

These the supreme king
Enal'd to such pow'r, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the orders bright. Milton.

The blessedlest of mortal wights, now questionless the highest saint in the celestial hierarchy, began to be so importunately that a great part of the divine liturgy was adduced solely to her. Howel.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.

The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

While the old Levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices.

Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarchy of bishops.

HIEROGLYPH. } n. f. [hieroglyph, French; ἱερός, sacred, and γράφω, to carve.]

1. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented. Hieroglyph seems to be the proper substantive, and hieroglyphick the adjective.

This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire.

A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyphick of life.

The first writing men used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphick.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd, And the leav'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd.

2. The art of writing in picture.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign any animals as patrons of punch.

HIEROGLYPHICAL. } adj. [hieroglyphique, French; from the noun.] Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble.

The Egyptian serpent figures time, And stripp'd, returns into his prime; If my affection, thou would'st win, First eat thy hieroglyphick skin.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition, stole into a total vesity, which was but partly true in its morality.

HIEROGLYPHICALLY. adv. [from hieroglyphical.] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically as the Egyptians, and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun.

HIEROGRAPHY. n. f. [ἱερός, and γράφω.] Holy writing.

HIEROPHANT. n. f. [ἱερόφαντος.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest.

Herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hierophants, abundantly gratified the fancies of the people.

TO HIGGLE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology, probably corrupted from haggle.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain. In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and elude in the amends.

To higgle thus for a few blows, To gain thy knight an op'ient spouse.

Why all this higgling with thy friend about such a paltry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull?

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning, such provisions being cut into small quantities.

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY. adv. A cant word; corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mass, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGGLER. n. f. [from higgle.] One who sells provisions by retail.

HIGH. adj. [heah, Saxon; hoog, Dut.]

1. Long upward; rising above from the surface, or from the centre: opposed to deep, or long downward.

Their Andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining they must of necessity at length come to an equality.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft: opposed to low.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them, And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd, That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabric; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being.

3. Exalted in nature.

The highest faculty of the soul.

4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest.

He woos both high and low, both rich and poor.

O mortals! blind in fate, who never know To bear high fortune, or endure the low.

5. Exalted in sentiment.

Solomon liv'd at ease, nor aim'd beyond Higher design than to enjoy his state.

6. Difficult; abstruse.

They meet to hear, and answer such high things.

7. Boastful; ostentatious.

His forces, after all the high discourses, amounted really but to eighteen hundred foot.

8. Arrogant; proud; lofty.

The governor made himself merry with his high and threatening language, and sent him word he would neither give nor receive quarter.

9. Severe; oppressive.

When there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent persecution, cunning advantages taken, and combination, then is the virtue of a judge seen.

10. Noble; illustrious.

Trust me, I am exceeding weary. —I had thought weariness durst not have attacked to high blood—it doth me, though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it.

11. Violent; tempestuous; loud. Applied to the wind.

More ships in calms on a deceitful coast, Or unseen rocks, than in high storms are lost.

Spiders cannot weave their nets in a high wind.

At length the winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;

Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up In its full fury.

12. Tumultuous; turbulent; ungovernable.

Not only tears Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within, Began to rise; high passions, anger, Mistrust, suspicion, discord, hate, shook fire Their inward state of mind.

Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,

Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

13. Full; complete: applied to time; now used only in cursory speech.

High time now 'gan it was for Una fair, To think of those her captive parents dear.

Sweet warrior, when shall I have peace with you?

High time it is this war now ended were, Spenser.

It was high time to do so, for it was now certain that forces were already upon their march towards the west.

14. Raised to any great degree: as, high pleasure; high luxury; a high performance; a high colour.

Solomon liv'd at ease, and full Of honour, wealth, high fare.

High sauces and spices are fetch'd from the Indies.

15. Advancing in latitude from the line.

They are forced to take their course either high to the north, or low to the south.

16. At the most perfect state; in the meridian: as, by the sun it is high noon: whence probably the foregoing expression, high time.

It is yet high day, neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered.

17. Far advanced into antiquity.

The nominal observation of the several days of the week is very high, and as old as the ancient Egyptians, who named the same according to the seven planets.

18. Dear; exorbitant in price.

If they must be good at so high a rate, they know they may be safe at a cheaper.

19. Capital; great; opposed to little: as, high treason, in opposition to petty.

HIGH. n. f. High place; elevation; superior region: only used with from and on.

Which when the king of gods beheld from high,

He sigh'd.

ON HIGH. adv. Aloft; above; into superior regions.

Wide is the fronting gate, and raised on high, With adamantine columns threat the sky.

HIGH is much used in composition with variety of meaning.

HIGH-BL'EST. adj. Supremely happy.

The good which we enjoy from heav'n descends; But that from us ought should ascend to heav'n.

So prevalent, as to concern the mind Of God high-bless'd, or to incline his will, Hard to belief may seem.

HIGH-BLOWN. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.

I have ventur'd, Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders, These many summers on a sea of glory;

But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride

At length broke under me, and now has left me, Weary, and old with service, to the mercy Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.

HIGH-BORN. Of noble extraction.

Call round your eyes Upon the high-born beauties of the court;

There chafe some worthy partner of your heart

HIGH-BUILT. adj.

1. Of lofty structure.

I know him by his stride, The giant Harapha of Gath; his look Naughty as is his pile, high-built and proud.

Of this day's journey.
Shakspeare.

HIGHNESS. n. f. [from high.]

1. Elevation above the surface; altitude; loftiness.

2. The title of princes; anciently of kings.

Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than that your highness offer'd.
Shakspeare.

How long in vain had nature striv'd to frame
A perfect prince, ere her highness came? Wallter.
Beauty and greatness are eminently joined in your royal highness.
Dryden.

3. Dignity of nature; supremacy.

Destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure.
Job.

HIGHT. [This is an imperfect verb, used only in the preterit tense with a passive signification; hatan, to call, Saxon; beffen, to be called, German.]

1. Was named; was called.

The city of the great king hight it well,
Wherein eternal peace and happiness doth dwell.
Spenser.

Within this homestead liv'd without a peer
For crowing loud, the noble chauceleer;
So hight her cock.
Dryden's Nun's Priest.

2. It is sometimes used as a participle passive; called; named. It is now obsolete, except in burlesque writings.

Amongst the rest a good old woman was,
High mother Hubbard.

Mortimer.

HIGHWAY. n. f. [high and way.]

1. Great road; public path.

So few there be
That chuse the narrow path, or seek the right;
All keep the broad highway, and take delight
With many rather for to go astray. Fairy Queen.
Two inscriptions give a great light to the histories of Appian, who made the highway, and of Fabius the dictator.
Addison.

Entering on a broad highway,
Where power and titles scatter'd lay,
He strove to pick up all he found.
Swift.

2. Figuratively a train of action, with apparent consequence.

I could mention more trades we have lost, and are in the highway to lose.
Child on Trade.

HIGHWAYMAN. n. f. [highway and man.]

A robber that plunders on the publick roads.

'Tis like the friendship of pickpockets and highwaymen, that observe strict justice among themselves.
Bentley.

A remedy like that of giving my money to an highwayman, before he attempts to take it by force, to prevent the sin of robbery.
Swift.

HIGHWATER. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

HILARITY. n. f. [hilaritas, Latin.] Merriment; gayety.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalence for wine.
Brown.

HILD, in Elrick's grammar, is interpreted a lord or lady: so Hilbert is a noble lord; Matilda, an heroic lady. Gibson.

HIL'DING. n. f. [hild, Saxon, signifies a lord; perhaps hilding means originally a little lord in contempt, for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank: or a term of reproach abbreviated from hinderling, degenerate. Hughes' Spenser.]

1. A sorry, paltry, cowardly fellow.

He was some hilding fellow, that had stol'n
The horse he rode on.
Shakspeare.
If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect.
Shakspeare.

A base slave,
A hilding for a livery, a squire's cloth. Shakspeare.

2. It is used likewise for a mean woman.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;
Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots. Shakspeare.
This idle toy, this hilding from my power,
And sets us all at naught. Romeo's Jane Shore.

HILL. n. f. [hil, Saxon.] An elevation of ground less than a mountain.

My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide and serve;

Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love. Sidney.
Jerusalem is seated on two hills,
Of height unlike, and turned side to side. Swift.

HIM

Three sides are sure imbar'd with craggs and hills,
The rest is easy, scant to rise espy'd;
But mighty bulwarks fence the plainer part:
So art helps nature, nature strengtheneth art.

When our eye some prospect would pursue,
Descending from a hill, looks round to view.

A hill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral which, by a plastick virtue, and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow.

HILLLOCK. n. f. [from hill.] A little hill.

Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater:

What, judge ye, doth a hilllock show by the lofty Olympus.

Sometime walking not unseen,
By hedge-row elms, on hilllocks green,

This mountain, and a few neighbouring hilllocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions.

HILLY. adj. [from hill.] Full of hills; unequal in the surface.

Towards the hilly corners of Druias remain her very yet aboriginers, thrust amongst an assembly of mountains.

Climbing to a hilly steep,
He views his herds in vales afar.

Lo! how the Norrick plains
Rise hilly, with large piles of slaughter'd knights.

Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, though a man would chuse to travel through a plain one.

HILT. n. f. [hilt, Saxon, from healban, to hold.] The handle of any thing, particularly of a sword.

Now sits expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; crowns and coronets.

Take thou the hilt,
And when my face is cover'd as 'tis now,

Guide thou the sword.

He has this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt, a silver blaze.

HIM. [him, Saxon.]

1. The oblique case of he.
Me he restored unto my office, and him he hanged.

2. Him was anciently used for it in a neutral sense.

The subjunctive mood hath evermore some conjunction joined with him.

HIMSELF. pron. [him and self.]

1. In the nominative the same as he, only more emphatical, and more expressive of individual personality.

It was a sparing speech of the ancients to say, that a friend is another himself; for that a friend is far more than himself.

With thame remembers, while himself was one
Of the same herd, himself the same had done.

2. It is added to a personal pronoun or noun, by way of emphatical discrimination.

He himself returned again.

God himself is with us for our captain.

3. In ancient authors it is used neutrally for itself.

She is advanc'd
Above the clouds as high as heav'n himself.

4. In the oblique cases it has a reciprocal signification.

David had himself in the field.

HIN

5. It is sometimes not reciprocal.

I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit set a work by a reprovable badness in himself.

Nothing in nature can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to fight his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy.

By HIMSELF. Alone; unaccompanied.

Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

HIN. n. f. [הין, Saxon.] A measure of liquids among Jews, containing about ten pints.

With the one lamb a tenth deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of beaten oil.

HIND. adj. compar. binder; superl. bind-moff. [hynban, Saxon.] Backward; contrary in position to the face: as, bind legs. See HINDER and HINDMOST.

Bringing its tail to its head, it bends its back so far till its head comes to touch its hind part, and so with its armour gathers itself into a ball.

The flag
Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more,

And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore.

HIND. n. f. [hinde, Saxon, from hinnaus, Latin.]

1. The she to a stag; the female of red deer.

How he flew, with glancing dart amiss,
A gentle hind, the which the lovely boy
Did love as life.

Can'st thou mark when the hinds do calve?

Nor Hercules more lands or labours knew,
Not though the brazen-footed hind he flew.

2. [hine, Saxon.] A servant.

A couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their mistress, to carry me in the name of foul cloaths to Datchet-lane.

3. [hineman, Saxon.] A peasant; a boor; a mean rustick.

The Dutch, who came like greedy hinds before,

To reap the harvest their ripe years did yield,
Now look like thole, when rolling taunders roar,

And sheets of lightning blast the standing field.

He cloath'd himself in coarse array,
A lab'ring hind in shew.

HINDBERRIES. n. f. The same as raspberries.

To HINDER. v. a. [hindyran, Saxon.] To obstruct; to stop; to lord; to impede.

Hinder me not, seeing the Lord hath prospered my way.

The whole world shined with clear light, and none were hindered in their labours.

If the alms were hindered only by entreaty, the hinderer is not tied to restitution, because entreaty took not liberty away from the giver.

Solitude clamps thought and wit; too much company dissipates and hinders it from fixing.

What hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the same right.

To HINDER. v. n. To raise hinderances; to cause impediment.

You minims of *hinder*ing knot-grass made!

This objection hinders not but that the heroic action of some commander, enterprised for the christian cause, and executed happily, may be written.

HINDER. adj. [from hind.] That is in a position contrary to that of the face: opposed to fore.

Bears, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet; and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back.

HINDERANCE. n. f. [from binder.] Impediment; let; stop; obstruction: with of, sometimes with to, before the thing hindered; with to before the person.

False opinions, touching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent practices against the hinderances of them, and those practices new opinions, more pernicious than the first: yea, most extremely sometimes opposite to the first.

They must be in every christian church the same, except mere impossibility of so having it be the hinderance.

What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done?

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hinderance in pursuit of love?

He must conquer all these difficulties, and remove all these hinderances out of the way that leads to justice.

HINDERER. n. f. [from binder.] He or that which hinders or obstructs.

Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grow.

HINDERLING. n. f. [from binder or binder.] A paltry, worthless, degenerate animal.

HINDERMOST. adj. [This word seems to be less proper than hindmost.] Hindmost; last; in the rear.

He put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindermost.

Like to an enter'd tide they all rush by,
And leave you hindermost.

HINDMOST. adj. [Hind and most.] The last; the lag; that comes in the rear.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,
Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind.

Let him retire, betwixt two ages cast,
The first of this, and hindmost of the last,
A losing gambler.

The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;
So take the hindmost, hell—he said, and run.

HINGE. n. f. [or hingle, from hangle or hang.]

1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.

Of heav'n arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning.

Then from the hinge their strokes the gates divorce,
And where the way they cannot find, they force.

Heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high;

At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd.

2. The cardinal points of the world, east, west, north, and south.

If when the moon is in the hinge at east,
The birth breaks forward from its native rest;
Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This station gives.

Let him silently observe the first stirrings and intimations, the first hints and whispers of good and evil, that pass in his heart. South.

2. Suggestion; intimation.

On this hint I spoke, She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd. Shakespeare.
Actions are so full of circumstances, that, as men observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put different interpretations on them. Addison.

HIP n. f. [from heops, Saxon.] The fruit of the brier or the dogrose.

Eating hips, and drinking wat'ry foam. Hulstet's Tale.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;
The oaks bear masts, the briars scarlet hips. Shakespeare.

Years of store of haws and hips do commonly portend cold winters. Bacon's Natural History.

HIP n. f. [hype, Saxon.]

1. The joint of the thigh.

How now, which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? Shakespeare.

Hippocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that, using continual riding, they were generally mottled with the sciatica or hip gout. Brown.

2. The haunch; the flesh of the thigh.

So shepherds use To set the same mark on the hip Both of their found and gotten sheep. Hudibras.
Against a stump his tusks the monster grinds, And ranch'd his hips with one continu'd wound. Dryden.

3. To have on the HIP. [A low phrase.]

To have an advantage over another. It seems to be taken from hunting, the hip or haunch of a deer being the part commonly seized by the dogs.

If this poor brach of Venice, whom I cherish For his quick hunting, stand the putting on, I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip. Shakespeare.

To HIP v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sprain or shoot the hip.

His horse was hipp'd. Shakespeare.

2. HIP-HOP. A cant word formed by the reduplication of hop.

HIR

Your different tastes divide our poet's cares;
One foot the sock, t'other the buskin wears:
Thus, while he strives to please, he's forc'd to do't.

Like Volscian hip-hip in a single boot. Congreve.

HIP. interj. An exclamation, or calling to one; the same as the Latin eho, heu!

Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Sidney.

To Hiss. v. n. [hissen, Dutch.]

1. To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.

In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames and cooled glowing hot, in that furge, like a horseshoe; think of that; hissing
hot. Shaksp.

The merchants shall hiss at thee,
See the furies arise;
See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in their hair. Dryden.

Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

2. To condemn at a publick exhibition;

1. To condemn by hissing; to explode.
Every one will hiss him out to his disgrace.
Eccles.

She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that, instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hiss'd off the stage. More.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bursting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hiss'd off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hiss'd out of all the courts as ridiculous?
Collier on Duelling.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Thy mother plays, and I Play too; but so disgrac'd a part, whose issue
Will hiss me to my grave. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
A dismal universal hiss, the sound
Of publick scorn! Milton.

Fierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears
Of hisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears. Pope.

Hiss. interj. [Of this word I know not the original: some thought it a corruption of hubb, hubb it, hubb, hiss; but I have heard that it is an Irish verb commanding silence.] An exclamation commanding silence.

Mute silence hiss'd along!
'Lest philomel will deign a song,
In her sweetest saddest plight,
Smoother the rugged brow of night. Milton.
Mid, hiss, says another that stood by, away,

doctor; for here's a whole pack of dismal coming. Swift.

HISTORIAN. n. f. [historicus, Lat. historius, Fr.] A writer of facts and events;
a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompence
Equal, have I to render thee, divine Historian! Milton.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Addison.

Not added years on years my task could close,
The long historian of my country's woes. Pope.

HISTORICAL. } adj. [historique, Fr.
HISTORICK. } historicus, Latin.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.

In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Burnet's Theory.
Here rising bold the patriot's honest face;
There warriors frowning in historick brass. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

With equal justice and historick care,
Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historical.]

In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spake, did, or suffered in his own person. Hooker.

When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God? Hooker.

After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him. Pope's Essay on Homer.

To HISTORIFY. v. a. [from history.]

To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, historify
Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me. Sidney.

ical*.] Theatrically; in the manner of a buffoon.

To HIT. v. a. [from idus, Latin, Minshew; from hitto Danish, to throw at random, Junius.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first saw her I was presently stricken;
and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived. Sidney.

His conscience shall hit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly. Saunders.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.

Is he a god that ever flies the light?
Or naked he, disguis'd in all untruth?
If he be blind, how *hit*eth he so right? Sidney.
So hard it is to tremble, and not to err, and to hit the mark with a shaking hand. Saunders.

3. To attain; to reach; not to fail:
used of tentative experiments.

Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is to hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him. Shaksp.

Search every comment that your care can find,
Some here, some there, may hit the poet's mind.
Rowe.

Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to hit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns. Locke.

Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in hitting features. Atterbury.

luck.

Having the sound of ancient poets ringing in his ears, he mought needs in hitting out some of their tunes. Spenser.

To HIT. v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.

If bodies be extension alone, how can they move and hit one against another? or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension?
Locke.

Bones, teeth, and shells, being sustained in the water with metellick corpuscles, and the said corpuscles meeting with and hitting upon those bodies, become enjoin'd with them. Woodward.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident; not to miss.

Of expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it hits
Where hope is coldest and despair most fits.
Shaksp.

HIT

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.

The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it hits for the most part. Bacon's Natural History.

But thou bring'st valour too and wit,
Two things that seldom fail to hit. Hudibras.

This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible. Dryden.

All human race would fain be wits,
And millions miss for one that hits. Swift.

4. To light on.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Bacon.

You've hit upon the very string, which touch'd,
Echoes the sound, and jars within my soul;
There lies my grief. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing sooner: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon it. Tillotson.

There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon 't, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg. L'Estrange.

None of them hit upon the art. Addison.

There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley.

HIT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke.

The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

So he the fam'd Cilician fenceer prais'd
And at each hit with wonder seem amaz'd. Dryden.

2. A chance; a fortuitous event.

To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Gramscille.

If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgment, but a lucky hit. South.

But with more lucky hits than those
That use to make the stars depose. Hudibras.

The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estrange.

If casual concurrence did the world compute,
And things and hits fortuitous arise,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackmore.

3. A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit? Shakespeare.

These hits of words a true poet often finds,
Without seeking. Dryden.

If at first he minds his hits,
And drinks champagne among the wits,
Five deep he toasts the tow'ring lasses. Prior.

TO HITCH. v. n. [hregan, Saxon, or bocher, French. Skinner.] To catch; to move by jerks. I know not where it is used but in the following passage; nor here know well what it means.

Whoe'er offends at some unlucky time
Slides in a verse, or hitches in a rhyme;
Soured to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burden of some merry song. Pope.

TO HITCHEL. v. n. [See HATCHEL.]

To beat or comb flax or hemp.

HITCHEL. n. f. [heckel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

Hitherto, lords, what your commands imposed
I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying. Milt.

Hitherto she kept her love conceal'd,
And with those graces ev'ry day beheld
The graceful youth. Dryden.

He could not have failed to add the opposition of ill spirits to the good: this alone has hitherto been the practice of the moderns. Dryd.
To correct them, is a work that has hitherto been assumed by the least qualified hands. Swift.

HI'THERWARD. } adv. [hyðenweard, HI'THERWARDS. } Sax.] This way; toward this place.

Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The king himself in person hath set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily. Shakespeare.

A puissant and mighty pow'r
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shaksp.
Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton.

HIVE. n. f. [hyfe, Saxon.]

1. The habitation or artificial receptacle of bees.

HOA

So bees with smoke, and doves with noise
Hence,
Are from their hives and houses driv'n away. Shakespeare.

So wand'ring bees would perish in the air,
Did not a sound, proportion'd to their ear,
Appease their rage, invite them to the hive. Waller.

Bees have each of them a hole in their hives;
their honey is their own, and every bee minds
her own concerns. Addison.

2. The bees inhabiting a hive.

The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down. Shakespeare.

3. A company being together.

What modern masons call a lodge, was by antiquity called a hive of free masons; and therefore, when a dissention happens, the going off is to this day called swarming. Swift.

TO HIVE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into hives; to harbour.

Mr. Addison of Oxford has been troublesome to me: after his bees, my latter swarm is scarcely worth hiving. Dryden.

I can you tydings tell.
Fairly Queen.

This once happy hand,
By homebred fury rent, long groan'd.
Philips.

HO'MEFELT. adj. [home and felt.] Inward; private.

Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,
And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself;
But such a sacred and homefelt delight,
Such sober certainty of waking bliss,
I never heard till now.
Milton.

Happy next him who to these shades retires, Whom nature charms, and whom the muse inspires,
Whom humbler joys of homefelt quiet please,
Successive study, exercise, and ease.
Pope.

HO'MELIY. adv. [from homely.] Rudely; inelegantly.HO'MELINESS. n. f. [from homely.] Plain-ness; rudeness; coarseness.

Homer has opened a great field of railery to men of more delicacy than greatness of genius, by the homeliness of some of his sentiments.
Addison.

HO'MELY. adj. [from home.] Plain;
homely; not elegant; not beautiful;
not fine; coarse; rude. It is used both of persons and things.

Each place handsome without curiosity, and homely without loathsomeness.
Sidney.
Within this wood, out of a rock did rise
A spring of water, merrily tumbling down;
Whereto approached not in any wife
The homely shepherd, nor the ruder clown.
Spenser.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body.
Shakspeare.
Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confession binds but riddling shift.
Shakspeare.

Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits.
Shakspeare.

Our stomachs will make what 's homely savoury.
Shakspeare.

It is for homely features to keep home;
They had their name thence.

Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes.
Sidney.

My affairs
Do even drag me homeward.
Shakspeare.

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; so I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.

Look homeward, angel now, and melt with ruth;
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth!
Milton.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures borne,
They sing, and Asia's lakes their notes return.
Dryden.

What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And wand'ring homewards, seek our safety hence.
Dryden.

HO'MICIDE. n. f. [homicide, Fr. bomici- dium, Latin.]

1. Murder; manquelling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood;
construe this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden;
but construe it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood.
Haller.

2. Destruction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!
The homicide of names is less than lives.
Dryden.

3. [bomicide, Fr. bomicida, Lat.] A mur-derer; a man-slayer.

I'd undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.
—If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide;
Quincy.

These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.
Shakspeare.

He'll come, the homicide, to wield
His conqu'ring arms, with corps to strew the field.
Dryden.

With homicidal rage, the king opprest.
Pope.

HOMILETICAL. adj. [ὁμιλετικός.] Social;
conversable.

His life was holy, and when he had leisure for retirements, severe: his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not those lazy sullen ones of the cloyster.
Atterbury.

HO'MILY. n. f. [homilie, French; ὁμιλία.]
A discourse read to a congregation.

Homilies were a third kind of readings usual in former times; a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the casual, as now the necessary defect of sermons.
Hooker.

What tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried have patience, good people! Shakspeare. As you like it.

If we survey the homilies of the ancient church we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the business of the day.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

HOMOGE'NEAL. } adj. [homogene,
HOMOGE'NEOUS. } Fr. ὁμογενής.]

Having the same nature or principles;
suitable to each other.

The means of reduction, by the fire, is but by congregation of homogeneous parts.
Bacon.

Ice is a similiary body, and homogeneous con-cretion, whose material is properly water.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

An homogeneous mass of one kind is easily distinguishable from any other; gold from iron, sulphur from allum, and so of the rest.
Woodward's Natural History.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible,
I call simple, homogeneous, and similar: and that, whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar.
Newton.

HOMOGE'NEALNESS. } n. f. [from homo- HOMOGE'NEITY. } geneous, or homo- HOMOGE'NEOUSNESS. } geneal.] Participation of the same principles or nature;
similitude of kind.

The mixtures acquire a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Upon this supposition of only different diamet-ters, it is impossible to account for the homogeneity or similarity of the fermented liquors.
Cuvier.

HO'MOGENY. n. f. [ὁμογενία.] Joint nature. Not used.

By the driving back of the principal spirits, which preserve the confidence of the body, their government is dissolved, and every part returneth to his nature or homogeneity.
Bacon.

ὁμολόγος.] Having the same manner or proportions.HOMO'NYMOUS. adj. [homonyme, French; ὁμωνύμος.] Denominating different things; equivocal; ambiguous.

As words signifying the same thing are called synonymous, so equivocal words, or those which signify several things, are called homonymous, or ambiguous; and when persons use such ambiguous words, with a design to deceive, it is called equivocation.
Watts.

HOMO'NYMY. n. f. [homonymie, French;
ὁμωνυμία.] Equivocation; ambiguity.HOMO'TANOUS. adj. [μοτάνος.] Equable:
said of such distempers as keep a constant tenour of rise, state, and declension.

A hone and a pater to pare away grafts. Tusser.
TO HON. v. n. [hongian, Saxon.] To pine; to long for any thing.

HONEST. adj. [honeste, Fr. honestus, Lat.]

1. Upright; true; sincere.

What art thou?

—A very honest hearted fellow, and as poor as a king. Shakspeare.

An honest physician leaves his patient, when he can contribute no further to his health. Temple.

The way to relieve ourselves from those imposthumes, is an honest and diligent enquiry into the real nature and causes of things. Watts.

2. Chaste.

Wives may be merry and yet honest too.

Shakspeare.

3. Just; righteous; giving to every man his due.

Tate will subscribe, but fix no certain day,
He's honest, and as wit comes in, will pay. Tate.

HONESTLY. adv. [from honest.]

1. Uprightly; justly.

It doth make me tremble,

There should those spirits yet breathe, that when they cannot Live honestly, would rather perish basely.

Ben Jonson.

For some time past all proposals from private persons to advance the publick service, however honestly and innocently designed, have been called lying in the king's face. Swift

2. With chastity; modestly.

HONESTY. n. f. [honesté, Fr. honestus, Lat.] Justice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

—Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower.

Shakspeare.

Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty, in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem. Temple.

HONEY. n. f. [hunig, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honey, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. Hill.

Of honey, the first and finest kind is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining the combs without pressing. The second is often almost solid, procured by pressure: and the work is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, and discharges again from the stomach through the mouth into the comb. The honey deposited in the comb, is destined for the young offspring: but in hard seasons the bees are reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves. Hill

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shaksp.
Touching his education and first fostering,
Some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees. Keligh's History.

H O N

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours. Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wailes to a honey pot. L'Estrange.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sopo, solvent of the bile, balsamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbuthnot.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;
Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope.

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.

The king hath found

Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. Shakspeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakspeare.

3. Sweet; sweetness: a name of tenderness. [Mel; corculum.]

Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,

I prattle out of fashion, and I dote. Shakspeare.
Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee. Dryden

TO HONEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live

In the rank sweat of an incestuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the nasty fly. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

HONEY-BAG. n. f. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the stomach, which bees always fill to satisfy, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter. Grew's Museum.

HONEY-COMB. n. f. [honey and comb.]

The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb surround,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd. Dryden.

HONEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.]

Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mariner having discharged his gun which was honey-combed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wifeman.

HONEY-DEW. n. f. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects. Mortimer.

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn. Garth.

HONEY-FLOWER. n. f. [melanthus, Latin.]

A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name. Miller.

HONEY-GNAT. n. f. [mellio, Latin; honey and gnat.] An insect. Ainsworth.

HONEY-MOON. n. f. [honey and moon.]

The first month after marriage when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

A man should keep his finery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to dress till the honey-moon is over. Addison.

HONEY-SUCKLE. n. f. [caprifolium, Lat.]

Woodbine.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatsoever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it. Shakspeare.

Watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

Then melloil beat and honey-suckles pound;
With these alluring favours threw the ground. Dryden.

HO'NEY-WORT. n. f. [cerintbe, Lat.] A plant.

HO'NEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Being without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless. Shakspeare.

HO'NIED. adj. [from honey.]

1. Covered with honey.

The bee with honeyed thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing. Milton.

2. Sweet; luscious.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honeyed sentences. Shakspeare.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton.

HO'NORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour; made in honour.

There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addison.

This monument is only honorary, for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addison on Italy.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans shouled with little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addison.

HO'NOUR. n. f. [honneur, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honor, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank. Not used.

Return unto thy lord,
Bid him not fear the separated councils;
His honor and myself are at the one;
And at the other is my good friend Catesby. Shakspeare.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them honor
Of man's impossibilities, have prefer'd thee. Shakspeare.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness; magnanimity.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
—That which upholdeth him; that thee upholds.
His honor. Ouz, thine honor, Lewis: thine honor. Shakspeare.

If by honor is meant any thing distinct from conscience, 'tis no more than a regard to the censure and esteem of the world. Rogers.

6. Reverence; due veneration. To do honor is to treat with reverence.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shaksp.

His grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his state at court, amongst pursuivants.
—Ha! 'tis he, indeed!

Is this the honour they do one another? Shaksp.
This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parents, under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power. Rogers.

7. Chastity.

Be the honour flow'd,
I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven;
If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shakspere.
She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Shakspere.

8. Dignity of mien.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect! with native honour clad,
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all. Milton.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning. Burnet's Theory.

10. Publick mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their fun'ral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves. Dryden.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living. Atterbury.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that, at best, can be celebrated but by an inconsiderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given. Wate's Prep. for Death.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the seventh, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd to me my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Shakspere.
Honours were conferred upon Antoine by Hadrian in his infancy. Watson's Rom. Hist.

12. Civilities paid.

Then here a slave, or if you will, a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The fire then shook the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed. Dryden.

14. Honour, or on my honour, is a form of protestation used by the lords in judicial decisions.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise. Shakspere.

To HO'NOUR. v. a. [honorer, French; honoro, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was called our father, and was continually honoured of all men, as the next person unto the king. Ephes.

The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich man is honoured for his riches. Ecclesi.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches. Ecclesi.

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not. Pope.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.

We nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd, and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us, the honour'd number. Shakspere.

3. To glorify

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them, and I will be honoured upon

Pharaoh, and upon all his host, that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord. Exodus.

HO'NOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth? Isaiah.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

Sir, I'll tell you,
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Shakspere.

3. Conferring honour.

Think't thou it honourable for a nobleman
Still to remember wrongs? Shakspere.
Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,
And honourable wounds from battle brought. Dryden.

Many of those persons, who put this honourable task on me, were more able to perform it themselves. Dryden.

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.

Sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her cause to her eternal doom;
And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Spenser.

5. Not to be disgraced.

Here's a Bohemian Tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman:—let her descend, my chambers are honourable. Shakspere.

6. Free from taint; free from reproach.

As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this, that he took Joppe for an haven. Mac.
Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable. Shakspere.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.

The earl sent again to know if they would entertain their pardon, in case he should come in person, and assure it: they answered, they did conceive him to be so honourable, that from him self they would most thankfully embrace it. Huyot.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow. Shakspere.

8. Equitable

HO'NOURABLENESS. n. f. [from honourable.] Eminence; magnificence; generosity.

The rev'rend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him. Shakspere.

2. Magnanimously; generously.

After some six weeks, which the king did honourably interpose, to give space to his brother's intercession, he was arraigned of high treason and condemned. Racan.

3. Reputably; with exemption from reproach.

'Tis just, ye gods! and what I well deserve:
Why did I not more honourably starve! Dryden.

HO'NOURER. n. f. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I must not omit Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

HOOD, in composition, is derived from the Saxon had, in German keil, in Dutch heid. It denotes quality; character; condition: as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is written after the Dutch, as maidenhead. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; sisterhood, a company of sisters.

HOOD. n. f. [hod, Saxon, probably from hepod, head.]

1. The upper covering of a woman's head.

In velvet, white as snow, the troop was gown'd:

Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.

2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

He undertook so to muffle up himself in his hood, that none should discern him. Watson.

The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress: it had a hood, which could be separated from and joined to it. Arbuthnot.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree.

To HOOD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in a hood.

The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd,
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd. Pope.

2. To blind, as with a hood.

While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, Amen. Shakspere.

3. To cover.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dip't above;
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes
And hoods the flames that to their quarry strive. Dryden.

HO'ODMAN BLIND. n. f. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

What devil was't,
That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind? Shakspere.

To HO'ON-WINK. v. a. [hood and wink.]

1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

They willingly hood-winking themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice. Sidney.

We will bind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the league of the adversaries. Shakspere.

Then she who hath been hood-wink'd from her birth,

Doth first herself within death's mirror see. Davies.

So have I seen, at Christmas sports, one loil,
And, hood-wink'd, for a man embrace a post. Ben Jonson.

Satan is said to hood-wink those that flatter.

Prejudice so dexterously hood-winks men's minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light. Locke.

Must I wed Roderigo?

Fantastick cruelty of hood-wink'd chance! Romeo.

On high, where no base winds or clouds recess,

The hood-wink'd goddess keeps her partial court. Garth.

2. To cover; to hide.

Be patient; for the prize, I'll bring thee to,
Shall hood-wink this mischance. Shakspere.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

She delighted in infamy, which often she had used to her husband's shame, filling all men's ears, but his, with reproach; while he, hood-wink'd with kindness, least of all men knew who struck him. Sidney.

HOOF. n. f. [hop, Saxon; boef, Dutch.]

The hard horny substance on the feet of graminivorous animals.

With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy treets. Ezekiel.

The bull and ram know the use of their horns as well as the horse of his hoofs. Morgan.

HOOF-BOUND. adj. [hoof and bound.]

A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the fore feet, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horns of the quarters, which straitens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, inasmuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent. Farrist's Dict.

HOOFED. adj. [from hoof.] Furnished with hoofs.

Among quadrupeds, the roe-deer is the swiftest; of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful; of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest. Grew.

HOOK. n. f. [hoce, Saxon; hoec, Dutch.]

1. Any thing bent so as to catch hold: as, a shepherd's hook and pot hooks.

This falling not, for that they had not far enough undermined it, they assayed with great hooks and strong ropes to have pulled it down. Kneller.

2. The curved wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden hooks,
That from the foolish fish their baits do hide. Spenser.

My bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws. Shakespeare.
Though divine Plato thus of pleasures thought,
They us with hooks and baits, like fishes, caught. Denham.

3. A snare; a trap.

A shop of all the qualities that man
Loves woman for, besides that hook of wiving,
Fairest, which strikes the eye. Shakespeare.

4. An iron to seize the meat in the caldron.
About the caldron many cooks accoil'd,
With hooks and ladders, as used did require;
The while the viands in the vessel boil'd. Fairy Queen.

5. A sickle to reap corn.

Pease are commonly reaped with a hook at the end of a long stick. Mortimer.

6. Any instrument to cut or lop with.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
Like flashing Bently with his desperate hook. Pope.

7. The part of the hinge fixed to the post: whence the proverb, off the hooks, for in disorder.

My doublet looks,
Like him that wears it, quite off o' the hooks. Cleaveland.

She was horribly bold, meddling and expensive, eating out of the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.

While Sheridan is off the hooks,
And friend Delany at his books. Swift.

8. Hook. [In husbandry.] A field sown two years running. Ainsworth.

9. Hook or Crook. One way or other; by any expedient; by any means direct or oblique. Ludicrous.

Which be by hook or crook had gather'd,
And for his own inventions further'd. Hudib.
He would bring him by hook or crook into his quarrel. Dryden.

To Hook. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To catch with a hook.

The huge jack he had caught was served up for the first dish; upon our sitting down to it, he gave us a long account how he had hooked it, and loosed it, and at length drew it out upon the bank. Madison.

2. To entrap; to ensnare.

3. To draw as with a hook.

But she
I can hook to me. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

4. To fasten as with a hook.

5. To draw by force or artifice.

VOL. I.

There are many branches of the natural law no way reducible to the two tables, unless looked in by tedious consequences. Norris.

HOOKED. adj. [from hook.] Bent; curved.

Gryps signifies eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet gryps, for an hooked or aquiline nose. Brown.

Now thou threaten'st, with unjust decree,
To seize the prize which I so dearly bought:
Mean match to thine; for still above the rest,
Thy hook'd rapacious hands usurp the best. Dryd.
Caterpillars have claws and feet: the claws are hooked, to take the better hold in climbing from twig to twig, and hanging on the backlides of leaves. Grew.

HOOKEDNESS. n. f. [from hooked.] State of being bent like a hook.

HOOKNOSED. adj. [hook and nose.] Having the aquiline nose rising in the middle.

I may justly say with the hooknosed fellow of Rome there, Caesar, I came, saw, and overcame. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

HOOP. n. f. [hoop, Dutch.]

1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly casks or barrels.

Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood
Shall never leak. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

If I knew
What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge
O' th' world, I would pursue it. Shakespeare.

A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?
—About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shaksp.
To view so lewd a town, and to refrain,
What hoops of iron could my spleen contain! Dryden's Juvenal.

And learned Athens to our art must stoop,
Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop. Pope.

2. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a farthingale.

At coming in you saw her stoop:
The entry breath'd again 't her hoop. Swift.
All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty sties, and to keep fellows at a distance. Clarissa.

3. Any thing circular.

I have seen at Rome an antique statue of Time, with a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand. Addis.

To Hoop. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind or enclose with hoops.

The three hoop'd pot shall have ten hoops, and I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shaksp.
The casks for his majesty's shipping were hoop'd as a wine-cask, or hoop'd with iron. Kaleigh.

2. To encircle; to clasp; to surround.

If ever henceforth thou Shalt hoop his body more with thy embraces,
I will devise a death. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
I hoop the firmament, and inake
This my embrace the zodiac. Cleaveland.
That shelly guard, which hoops in the eye, and hides the greater part of it, might occasion his mistake. Grew.

To Hoop. v. n. [from croop or croop, Gothic; or houpper, French, derived from the Gothic. This word is generally written woop, which is more proper if we deduce it from the Gothic; and hoop if we derive it from the French.] To shout; to make an outcry by way of call or pursuit.

To Hoop. v. a.

1. To drive with a shout.

Daffard nobles
Suffer'd me, by the voice of slaves, to be Hoop'd out of Rome. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. To call by a shout.

HOOPER. n. f. [from hoop, to inclose with hoops.] A cooper; one that hoops tubs.

HOOPING-COUGH. n. f. [or whooping-cough, from hoop, to shout.] A convulsive cough, so called from its noise; the chincough.

To Hoop. v. n. [hoop, Welsh; huor, Fr.]

1. To shout in contempt.

A number of country folks happened to pass thereby, who insulted and hooped after me as at the arrantest coward. Sidney.

Matrons and girls shall hoop at thee no more. Dryden.

2. To cry as an owl.

Some keep back

The clamorous owl, that nightly hoops, and wenders
At our quaint sports. Shakespeare.

To Hoop. v. a. To drive with noise and shouts.

We lov'd him; but, like beasts,
Our coward nobles gave way to your clustlers,
Who did hoop him out o' th' city. Shakespeare.

The owl of Rome, whom boys and girls will hoop!

That were I set up for that wooden god
That keeps our gardens, could not fright the crows,
Or the least bird from musing on my head. Ben Jonson.

Partridge and his clan may hoop me for a cheat and impostor, if I fail in any particular of moment. Swift.

HOOT. n. f. [hoote, French, from the verb.] Clamour; shout; noise.

Its attention would be entertained with the hoot of the rabble. Glanville's Scaphis.

To HOP. v. n. [hoppa, Saxon; hopper, Dutch.]

1. To jump; to skip lightly.

I would have thee gone,
And yet no further than a wanton's bird,
That lets it hop a little from her hand,
And with a silk thread plucks it back again. Shakespeare.

Go, hop me over every kennel home;
For you shall hop without my custom, sir. Shaksp.
Be kind and courteous to this gentleman,
Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes. Shakespeare.

The painted birds, companions of the spring,
Hopping from spray to spray were heard. Dryden.
Your Ben and Fletcher, in their first young flight,

Did no Vulpene, nor no Arbaces write;
But hoop'd about, and short excursions made.
From bough to bough, as if they were afraid. Dryden.

Why don't we vindicate ourselves by trial or deal, and hop over heated ploughshares blindfold?
Collier on Duelling.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spenser.

2. To leap on one leg.

Men with heads like dogs, and others with one huge foot alone, whereupon they did hop from place to place. Abbot.

3. To walk lamely, or with one leg less nimble or strong than the other; to limp; to halt.

The limping smith observ'd the sudden'd least,
And hopping here and there, himself a jest,
Put in his word. Dryden's Homer.

4. To move; to play.

Sottily feel
Her feeble pulse, to prove if any drop
Of living blood yet in her veins did hop. Fairy Queen.

HOP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A jump; a light leap.

2. A jump on one leg.

When my wings are on, I can go above a hundred yards at a hop, step, and jump. Addison.

3. A place where meaner people dance.

Ainsworth.

HOP. n. f. [hop, Dutch; lupulus, Latin.]

A plant.

It has a creeping root: the leaves are tough, angular, and conjugated; the stalks climb and twist about whatever is near them; the flowers are male and female on different plants: the male flower consists of a calyx divided into five parts, which surrounds the stamina, but has no petals to the flower; the female plants have their flowers collected into squamose heads, which grow in bunches: from each leafy scale is produced an horny ovary, which becomes a single roundish seed. Mittler.

If hop yard or orchard ye mind to have,
For hop poles and crutches in hopping to save.

Tusser.

The planting of hop yards is profitable for the planters, and consequently for the kingdom.

Bacon.

Beer hath malt first infused in the liquor, and is afterwards boiled with the hop. Bacon.

Next to thistles are hop strings, cut after the flowers are gathered. Derham.

Have the poles without forks, otherwise it will be troublesome to part the hop vines and the poles. Mortimer.

When your water hops, on the top of every hill put dissolved dung, which will enrich your hop hills. Mortimer.

In Kent they plant their hop gardens with apple-trees and cherry-trees between. Mortimer.

The price of hosing of hop ground is forty shillings an acre. Mortimer.

Hop poles, the largest sort, should be about twenty foot long, and about nine inches in compass. Mortimer.

To HOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To impregnate with hops.

Brew in October, and hop it for long keeping. Mortimer.

To increase the milk, diminished by steth meat, take malt-drink but much hopped. Arbuth.

HOPE. n. f. [hops, Saxon; hope, Dutch.]

1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.

Hope is that pleasure in the mind which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing which is apt to delight him. Locke.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again. Job.

When in heav'n the shall his essence see,
This is her foreign good, and perfect bliss;
Her longing, withing, hopes, all finish'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this. Davies.

Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee
We are not where or what we be;
But what and where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now. Cresswell.

Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hope to despair. Taylor.

He taught them both, but wish'd his hap might find,

Eve separate: he wish'd, but not with hope
Of what he seldom chanc'd; when to his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Milton.

The Trojan dames

To Pallas' face in long procession go,
In hopes to recover their heavenly foe. Dryden.

Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be, as I comfort myself with the fear of it. L'Estrange.

To encourage our hopes, it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obstacles. Liliason.

The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for fight, desire for enjoyment. Atterbury.

Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hopes of them. Swift.

2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any person.

It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him. 2 Maccabees.

Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord. Eccles.

3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.

I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where the war quarter'd. Shakespeare.

4. The object of hope.

Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit, an indigested deform'd lump. Shakespeare.

She was his care, his hope, and his delight,
Most in his thought, and ever in his fight. Dryden.

HOPE. n. f. Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains. *Ainsworth.*To HOPE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in expectation of some good.
Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husbandman hope for a good harvest. Taylor.

My muse, by dreams long tost,
Is thrown upon your hospitable coast;
And finds more favour by her ill success,
Than the could hope for by her happiness. Dryden.

Who knows what adverse fortune may befall?
Arm well your mind, hope little, and fear all. Dryden.

2. To place confidence in another.
He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord. Psalms.

To HOPE. v. a. To expect with desire.
The sun shines hot; and if we use delay,
Cold-biting winter mars our hop'd-for hay. Shakespeare.

So stands the Thracian herdman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.

HO'PEFUL. adj. [hope and full.]

1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.

He will advance thee:
I know his noble nature, not to let Thy hopeful service perish. Shakespeare.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince whom you must not desert. Bacon.

What to the old can greater pleasure be,
Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see? Denham.

They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hop-ful scholars by that time they are three-score. Addison.

2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatsoever they took in hand. Hucker.

I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments. Boyle.

Whatever ills the friendless orphan bears,
Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,
Still must the wrong'd Telemachus sustain,
If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain. Pope.

HO'PEFULLY. adv. [from hopeful.]

1. In such manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.

He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with earls' sons and heirs. Watson.

They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hopefully, to the reduction or suppression of the Irish. Clarendon.

2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.

From your promising and generous endeavours we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature. Glanville.

HO'PEFULNESS. n. f. [from hopeful.]

Promise of good; likelihood to succeed.

Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be timely discerned what the child will prove in probability. Watson.

HO'PELESS. adj. [from hope.]

1. Wanting hope; being without pleasing expectation; despairing.

Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead? Hooker.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless! Shakespeare.

He watches with greedy hope to find
His wish, and best advantage, as a sander;
Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each
To other speedy aid might lend at need. Milton.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,
And hopeless to prevail by open force,
Seeks hid advantage. Dryden.

Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie
In durance, doom'd a lingering death to die. Dryden.

2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.

The hopeless word of never to return,
Breathe I against thee upon pain of life. Shakespeare.

HO'PER. n. f. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.

I except all hopes, who turn the scale, because the strong expectation of a good certain salary will outweigh the loss by bad rents. Swift.

HO'PINGLY. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.

One sign of despair is the presumptuous contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in terrours and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopelessly, and confidently in wilful habits of sin. Hammond.

HO'PPER. n. f. [from hop.] He who hops or jumps on one leg. Ainsworth.

HO'PPERS. n. f. [commonly called Scotch hoppers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.

HO'PPER. n. f. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, for the same reason, tremie or tremue.]

1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.

The Galt of the lake Asphaltites consisteth into perfect cubes. Sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the Hoppers of a mill. Grew.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill: their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach. Archibute on Aliments.

Just at the hopper will I stand,
In my whole life I never saw grief ground,
And mark the clack how justly it will found. Betterton.

2. A basket for carrying seed. Ainsworth.

HO'RAL. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.

How'er reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horol orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prim.
HO'RARY. adj. [horairs, French; horarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to an hour.
I'll draw a figure that shall tell you
What you perhaps forgot befell you,
By way of horary inspection,
Which some account our work erection. Hudibras.

In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has discussed, under the character of reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers. Tuttle.

2. Continuing for an hour.
When, from a basket of summer-fruit, God
by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of summer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HORDE. n. f. A clan; a migratory crew of people. It is applied only to the Tartars.

Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial hordes on hords with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form. Thomson.

HORIZON. n. f. [ῥιζών] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real:
the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakspeare horizon.

When the morning sun shall raise his ear
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates. Shakspeare.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon.

In his east the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day; and all th' horizon round
Inverted with bright rays. Milton.

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning gray;
And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,
That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous light. Dryden.

When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect. Addison.

HORIZONTAL. adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon.]

1. Near the horizon.
As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.
An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt
by Augustus. Brown.

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbutnot on Corns.

HORIZONTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.]

In a direction parallel to the horizon.
As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially; or almost horizontal unto it. Brown.
The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with celerity. Bentley.

HORN. n. f. [hauru, Gothick; horn,
Saxon; born, Dutch.]

1. The hard bodies which grow on the heads of some graminivorous quadru-peds, and serve them for weapons.
No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth. Bacon.

Zelus rises through the ground,
Bending the bull's tough neck with pain,
That tosses back his horns in vain. Addison.

All that process is no more surprising than the eruption of horns in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age. Bentley.

2. An instrument of wind-musick made of horn.

The squire 'gan nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the cattle-wall,
That with the noise it thook as it would fall. Fairy Queen.

There 's a post come from my matter, with his horn full of good news. Shakspeare.

The goddess to her crooked horn
Adds all her breath: the rocks and woods around,
And mountains, tremble at th' infernal sound. Dryden.

Fair Ascanius, and his youthful train,
With horns and hounds a hunting match ordain. Dryden.

3. The extremity of the waxing or waining moon, as mentioned by poets.

She blest 'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden.

The moon
Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns. Thomson.

4. The feelers of a snail. Whence the proverb, To pull in the horns, to repress one's ardour.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakspeare.

Audius,
Hearing of our Marcius's banishment,
Thrust forth his horns again into the world,
Which were inshell'd when Marcius stood for Rome,
And durst not once peep out. Shakspeare.

5. A drinking cup made of horn.

6. Antler of a cuckold.
If I have horns to make one mad,
Let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad. Shakspeare.

Merchants, vent'ring through the main,
Slight pyrates, rocks, and horns for gain. Hudibras.

7. HORN mad. Perhaps mad as a cuck-old.

I am glad he went not in himself: if he had,
he would have been horn mad. Shakspeare.

HORNBEAK. n. f. A kind of fish.

HORNPI'SH. n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HORNBEAM. n. f. [born and beam, Dut.
for tree, from the hardness of the timber.]

It hath leaves like the elm or beech-tree
The timber is very tough and inflexible, and of excellent use. Miller.

HORNBOOK. n. f. [born and book.] The first book of children, covered with horn to keep it unsoiled.

He teaches boys the hornbook. Shakspeare.
Nothing has been considered of this kind out of the ordinary road of the hornbook and primer. Locke.

To master John the English maid
A hornbook gives of ginger-bread;
And that the child may learn the better,
As he can name, he eats the letter. Prior.

HORNED. adj. [from born.] Furnished with horns.

As when two rams, stir'd with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock;
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that, with the terror of the shock, Astonish'd both stand senseless as a block. Fairy Queen.

Thither all the horned host resorts,
To graze the ranker mead. Danfam.
Thou king of horned floods, whose piteous urn
Suffices fatness to the fruitful corn. Dryden.

HO'RNER. n. f. [from born.] One that works in horn, and sella horns.

The skin of a bull's forehead is the part of the hide made use of by horners, whereupon they shave their horns. Grew.

HO'RNET. n. f. [hynnette, Saxon, from its horns.] A very large strong stinging fly, which makes its nest in hollow trees.

Silence, in times of suffering, is the best;
'Tis dangerous to disturb a hornet's nest. Dryd.
Hornets do mischief to trees by breeding in them. Mortimer.

I have often admired how hornets, that gather dry materials for building their nests, have found a proper matter to glue their combs. Derham.

HO'RNFOT. n. f. [born and foot.] Hoofed.

Mad frantick men, that did not inty quake!
With hornfoot horses, and brass wheels, Juve's flurms to emulate. Hakewill.

HO'RNOWL. n. f. A kind of horned owl.
Ainsworth.

HO'RNPIFE. n. f. [born and pipe.] A country dance, danced commonly to a antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown.

HORO'SCOPE. n. f. [horoscope, French; αποσκοπος.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and countervail that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth? Drammond.

A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh hour, or opposite signs every seventh year, opposeth living creatures. Brown.

Him born beneath a boding horoscope,
 His fire, the blazey'd Vulcan of a shop,
 From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school. Dryden.

The Greek names this the horoscope,
 This governs life, and this marks out our parts,
 Our humours, manners, qualities and arts. Creech.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore, in those parts, noon is nothing to hot as about nine in the forenoon.

Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body first;
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mist.

Dryden.

Black substances do soonest of all others become hot in the sun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from easy commotion of so very small corpuscles.

Newton.

2. Lustful; lewd.

What hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out.

Shakspeare.

Now the hot blooded gods assist me! remember,
Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa.

Shakspeare.

3. Violent; furious; dangerous.

That of Carthage, where the Spaniards had warning of our coming, was one of the hottest services, and most dangerous assaults that hath been known.

Bacon.

He resolv'd to storm; but his soldiers declined that hot service, and plied it with artillery.

Clarendon.

To court the cry directs us, when we found
Th' assault to hot, as if 'twere only there.

Denham.

Our army
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors.

Dryden.

4. Ardent; vehement; precipitate.

Come, come, lord Mortimer, you are as slow,
As hot lord Percy is on fire to go.

Shakspeare.

Nature to youth hot rathens doth dispense,
But with cold prudence age doth recompense.

Denham.

Achilles is impatient, hot, revengeful; Aeneas, patient, considerate, and careful of his people.

Dryden.

5. Eager; keen in desire.

It is no wonder that men, either perplexed in the necessary affairs of life, or hot in the pursuit of pleasures, should not seriously examine their tenets.

Locke.

She has, quoth Ralph, a jointure,
Which makes him have so hot a mind t' her.

Madlibair.

6. It is applied likewise to the desire, or sense raising the desire, or action excited: as, a hot pursuit.

Nor law, nor checks of conscience will we hear,
When in hot scent of gain and full career.

Dryden.

7. Piquant; acid: as, hot as mustard.

HO'TBED. n. f. A bed of earth made hot by the fermentation of dung.

The bed we call a hotbed is this: there was taken horserdung, old and well rotted; this was laid upon a bank half a foot high, and supported round about with planks, and upon the top was cast sifted earth two fingers deep.

Bacon.

Preserve the hotbed as much as possible from rain.

Evelyn.

HOTBRAIN'D. adj. [hot and brain.] Violent; vehement; furious. Cerebrosus.

You shall find 'em either hotbrain'd youths,
Or needy bankrupts.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

HO'TCHPOT. } n. f. [baché en pot, French, as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used.] A mingled hath; a mixture; a confused mass.

Such patching maketh Littleton's hotchpot of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rather

H O T

to a Babelish confusion than any one entire language.

Camden's Remains

A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture or hatch-patch of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste.

Bacon's Natural History

Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcals would remain;

But a mass'd heap, a hatchpatch of the slain.

Dryden's Juvenal

HOTCOCKLES. n. f. [hautes coquilles, Fr.]

A play in which one covers his eyes, and guesses who strikes him.

The chytindra is certainly not our hotcockles; for that was by pinching, not by striking

Arbutnot and Pope

As at hotcockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buzoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and read soft mischief in her eye.

Gay

HOTHEA'DED. adj. [hot and head.] Vehement; violent; passionate.

One would not make the same person zealous for a standing army and public liberty; nor a hatched crackbrained coxcomb forward for a scheme of moderation.

Arbutnot

HOTHOUSE. n. f. [hot and house.]

1. A bagnio; a place to sweat and cup in.

Now the professed a hathouse, which is a very ill house too.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure

2. A brothel.

Where lately harbour'd many a famous whore,
A purging bill, now fix'd upon the door,
Tells you it is a hathouse; so it may,
And still be a whorehouse: th' are synonyma.

Ben Jonson

HOTLY. adv. [from hot.]

1. With heat; not coldly.

2. Violently; vehemently.

The flag was in the end to hotly pursued, that he was driven to make courage of despair.

Sidney

As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did Content against thy valour.

Shakespeare

The enemy, now at hand, began hotly to skirmish in divers places with the christians.

Knelles' History

Though this controversy be revived, and hotly agitated, I doubt whether it be not a nominal dispute.

Boyle

3. Lustfully.

Voracious birds, that hotly bill and breed,
And largely drink, because on salt they feed.

Dryden

HOTMOUTHED. adj. [hot and mouth.] Headstrong; ungovernable.

I fear my people's faith,
That hormurk'd beast that bears against the curb,
Hard to be broken.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar

HOTNESS. n. f. [from hot.] Heat; violence; fury.

HOTSPUR. n. f. [hot and spur.]

1. A man violent, passionate, precipitate, and heady.

My nephew's trespasss may be well forgot;
It bath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,
A barebrain'd hotspur govern'd by a spleen.

Shakespeare

Wars are begun by hairbrained disolute captains, parasitical fawners, unquiet hotspurs, and restless innovators.

Burton

2. A kind of pea of speedy growth.

Of such peas as are planted or sown in gardens, the hotspur is the speediest of any in growth.

Mortimer

HOTSPURRED. adj. [from hotspur.] Vehement; rash; heady.

To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or Venus like that hotspurred Harpalice in Virgil, this proceedeth from a senseless judgment.

Peachum

H O U

HOVE. The preterit of beave.

HOVEL. n. f. [diminutive of hope, house, Saxon.]

1. A shed open on the sides, and covered overhead.

So likewise a hovel will serve for a room, To shackle on the peale, when harvest shall come.

Tupper

If you make a hovel, thatched, over some quantity of ground, plank the ground over, and it will breed saltpetre.

Bacon

Your hay it is mow'd, your corn it is reap'd, Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd.

Dryden

2. A mean habitation; a cottage.

The men clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them and milk them, and do all the dairy-work in such sorry hovels and sheds as they build to inhabit in during the summer.

Ray on the Creation

To HOVEL. v. s. [from the noun.] To shelter in a hovel.

And was't thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw?

Shakespeare

HOVEN. part. pass. [from beave.] Raised; swelled; tumefied.

Tom Piper hath hoven and puffed up cheeks;
If cheese be so hoven, make Cissie to seek cheeks.

Tupper

To HOVER. v. n. [bovio, to hang over, Welsh.]

1. To hang in the air overhead, without flying off one way or other.

Some fiery devil hovens in the sky,
And pours down mischief.

Shakespeare

Ah, my poor pinces! ah, my tender babes!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,

Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation

Shaksp.

A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night.

Dryd.

Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it.

Addison

'Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;
Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,

Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,
And thence with liberty unbounded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies.

Prior

Some less refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light,
Hover, and catch the shooting stars by night.

Pope

2. To stand in suspense or expectation.

The landlord will no longer covenant with him; for that he daily looketh after change and alteration, and hoveth in expectation of new worlds.

Spenser on Ireland

3. To wander about one place.

We see so warlike a prince at the head of so great an army, hovering on the borders of our confederates.

Addison

The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind fully possesses itself of it; in the other, it only hoveth about it.

Locke

HOUGH. n. f. [hog, Saxon.]

1. The lower part of the thigh.

Blood shall be from the sword unto the belly,
and dung of men into the camel's hough.

2 Efd.

2. [buë, French.] An adz; a hoe. See HOE.

Did they really believe that a man, by houghs and an axe, could cut a god out of a tree?

Stillingfleet

To HOUGH. v. a. [from the noun.]

Tbou shalt hough their horses.

Jobus

2. To cut up with a hough or hoe.

H O U

3. To hawk. This orthography is uncommon. See TO HAWK.

Neither could we hough or spit from us; much less could we sneeze or cough.

Crew.

HOULET. n. f. The vulgar name for an owl. The Scots and northern counties still retain it.

HOULT. n. f. [holt, Saxon.] A small wood. Obsolete.

Or as the wind, in houlter and shady greaves,
A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves.

Fairfax

HOULD. n. f. [hund, Saxon; hund, Scottish.] A dog used in the chase.

Hounds and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs,

Are cleft all by the name of dogs.

Jason threw, but fail'd to wound
The bear, and flew an underving hound,
And through the dog the dart was nail'd to ground.

Dryden

The kind spaniel and the faithful hound,
Liketh that fox in shape and species found,
Pursues the noted path and covets home.

Prior

To HOULD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set on the chase.

God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare.

Bramhall

2. To hunt; to pursue.

If the wolves had been hounded by tigers, they should have worried them.

L'Estrange

Ainsworth

HOURE. n. f. [heure, Fr. hora, Lat.]

1. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of sixty minutes.

See the minutes how they run:
How many makes the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live.

Shaksp.

2. A particular time.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.

Shakespeare

When we can intreat an hour to serve,
We'll spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time.

Shakespeare

The conscious wretch must all his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death.

Dryden

3. The time as marked by the clock.

The hour runs through the roughest day.

Shak.

Our neighbour let her floor to a genteel man, who kept good hours.

Tatler

They are as loud any hour of the morning, as our own countrymen at midnight.

Addison

HOURLASS. n. f. [hour and glass.]

1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.

Next morning, known to be a morning better by the hourglass than the day's clearness.

Sidney

In sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind doth value every moment.

Bacon

Shake not his hourglass, when his hasty sand is ebbing to the last.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar

2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.

We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field.

Bacon

HOURLY. adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour; frequent; often repeated.

Alcyon

Computes how many nights he had been gone,
Observes the waning moon with hourly view,
Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryd.
We must live in hourly expectation of having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us. Swift.

HOURLY. adv. [from hour.] Every hour; frequently.

She deserves a lord,
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And hourly call her mistress. Shakspeare.

Our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

They with ceaseless cry
Surround me, as thou saw'st; hourly conceiv'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd,
Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd. Dryden.

HOURLYPLATE. n. f. [hour and plate.]
The dial; the plate on which the hours, pointed by the hand of a clock, are inscribed.

If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourlyplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that acuteness. Locke.

HOUSE. n. f. [huy, Saxon; buys, Dut.
huise, Scottish.]

1. A place wherein a man lives; a place of human abode.

Sparrows must not build in his house eaves. Shakspeare.

Houses are built to live in, not to look on;
therefore let use be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had. Bacon.

In a house the doors are moveable, and the rooms square; yet the house is neither moveable nor square. Watts.

2. Any place of abode.

The bees with smoke, the doves with noisome flesh,
Are from their hives and houses driven away. Shakspeare.

3. Place in which religious or studious persons live in common; monastery;
college.

Theodosius arrived at a religious house in the city, where now Constantia resided. Addison.

4. The manner of living; the table.

He kept a miserable house, but the blame was laid wholly upon madam. Swift.

5. Station of a planet in the heavens, astrologically considered.

Pure spiritual substances we cannot converse with, therefore have need of means of communication, which some make to be the celestial houses: those who are for the celestial houses worship the planets, as the habitations of intellectual substances that animate them. Stillingfleet.

6. Family of ancestors; descendants, and kindred; race.

The red rose and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our striving houses. Shakspeare.
An innumerable ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses' lawful mercy sure
Is nothing kin to foul redemption. Shakspeare.

By delaying my last line, upon your grace's acception to the patrimonies of your house, I may seem to have made a forfeiture. Dryden.

A poet is not born in every race;
Two of a house few ages can afford,
One to perform, another to record. Dryden.

7. A body of the parliament; the lords or commons collectively considered.

Nor were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially that of the lords. King Charles.

To HOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To harbour; to admit to residence.

Palladius wished him to house all the Helots. Sidney.

Upon the North-sea a valley houseth a gentleman, who hath worn out his former name. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Stander lives upon succession,
For ever hous'd where it gets possession. Shakspeare.

Mere cottagers are but hous'd beggars. Bacon.
Oh, can your counsel his despair deter,
Who now is hous'd in his sepulchre? Sandys.

We find them housing themselves in dens. South.

In expectation of such times as these,
A chapel hous'd 'em, truly called of ease. Dryd.

2. To shelter; to keep under a roof.

As we house not country plants to save them, so we may house our own to forward them. Bacon's Natural History.

House your choicest carnations, or rather set them under a penthouse, to preserve them in extremity of weather. Evelyn.

Wit in northern climates will not blow,
Except, like orange trees, 'tis hous'd from snow. Dryden.

To HOUSE. v. n.

1. To take shelter; to keep abode; to reside.

Ne suffer it to house there half a day. Hub. To.
Graze where you will, you shall not house with me. Shakspeare.

Summers three times eight, save one,
She had told; alas! too soon,
After so short time of breath,
To house with darkness and with death. Milton.

2. To have an astrological station in the heavens.

In fear of this, observe the starry signs,
Where Saturn houses, and where Hermes joins. Dryden.

I housing in the lion's hateful sign,
Bought ignates and deserting troops are mine. Dryden.

HOUSEBREAKER. n. f. [house and break.]
Burglar; one who makes his way into houses to steal.

All housebreakers and sharpers had thief written in their foreheads. L'Estrange.

HOUSEBREAKING. n. f. [house and break.] Burglary.

When he hears of a rogue to be tried for robbing or housebreaking, he will lend the whole paper to the government. Swift.

HOUSEDOG. n. f. [house and dog.] A mastiff kept to guard the house.

A very good housedog, but a dangerous cur to strangers, had a bell about his neck. L'Estrange.

You see the goodness of the master even in the old housedog. Addison.

HOUSEHOLD. n. f. [house and hold.]

1. A family living together.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny. Shak.

A little kingdom is a great household, and a great household a little kingdom. Bacon.

Of God's behest'd

The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a world's ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milton.

He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men, a peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and govern'd as a master: this is the proper household of faith: in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Spenser.

Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,

And second funerals on the former laid;
Let the whole household in one ruin fall,
And may Diana's curse o'erstrike us all. Dryden.

Learning's little household did embark,
With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark. Swift.

In his own church he keeps a seat,
Says grace before and after meat;
And calls, without affecting airs,
His household twice a-day to prayers. Swift.

2. Family life; domestick management.

An inventory, thus importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuff, and ornaments of household. Shakspeare.

3. It is used in the manner of an adjective, to signify domestick; belonging to the family.

Cornelius called two of his household servants. Act.

For nothing lovelier can be found
In woman, than to study household good;
And good works in her husband to promote. Milton.

It would be endless to enumerate the oaths among the men, among the women the neglect of household affairs. Swift.

HOUSEHOLDER. n. f. [from household.]
Master of a family.

A certain householder planted a vineyard. Mat.

HOUSEHOLDSTUFF. n. f. [household and stuff.] Furniture of a house; utensils convenient for a family.

In this war that he maketh, he still flieth from his foe, and lurketh in the thick woods, waiting for advantages: his cloke is his bed, yea and his householdstuff. Spenser on Ireland.

A great part of the building was consumed, with much costly householdstuff. Havon.

The woman had her jeit for her householdstuff. L'Estrange.

HOUSEKEEPER. n. f. [house and keep.]

1. Householder; master of a family.

To be said an honest man and a good housekeeper, goes as fairly as to say a graceful man and a great scholar. Shakspeare.

If I may credit housekeepers and substantial tradesmen, all sorts of provisions and commodities are risen excessively. Locke.

2. One who lives in plenty; one that exercises hospitality.

The people are apter to applaud housekeepers than housecrafters. Boswell.

3. One who lives much at home.

How do you both? You are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing there? Shakspeare.

4. A woman servant that has care of a family, and superintends the other maid servants.

Merry folks, who want by chance
A pair to make a country-dance,
Call the old housekeeper, and get her,
To fill a place for want of better. Swift.

5. A housedog. Not in use.

Distinguish the housekeeper, the hunter. Shakspeare.

HOUSEKEEPING. adj. [house and keep.]
Domestick; useful to a family.

His house for pleasant prospect, large scope, and other housekeeping commodities, challengeth
the pre-eminence. Claudian.

HOUSEKEEPING. n. f. Hospitality; liberal and plentiful table.

I hear your grace hath sworn out housekeeping. Shakspeare.

His table was one of the last that gave us an example of the old housekeeping of an English nobleman: an abundance reigned, which shew'd the master's hospitality. Prior.

HOUSE. n. f. [huy, Saxon, from huyf, Gothick, a sacrifice, or hufiu, dimin.
hufiola, Latin.] The holy eucharist.

HOU

Yet still we scribble on, though still we lose. Dryden.

HO'USESNAIL. n. f. A kind of snail.

HO'USEWARMING. n. f. [house and warm.]
A feast or merrymaking upon going into a new house.

HO'USEWIFE. n. f. [house and wife.] This is now frequently written, housewife, or huffy.

1. The mistress of a family.

You will think it unfit for a good housewife to sit in or to busy herself about her housewifery.
Spenser on Ireland.

I have room enough, but the kind and hearty housewife is dead. Pope to Swift.

2. A female economist.

Fitting is a mantle for a bad man, and surely for a bad housewife it is no less convenient; for some of them, that be wandering women, it is half a wardrobe. Spenser on Ireland.

Let us sit and muck the good housewife, fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be disposed equally. Shakespeare.

Farmers in degree,
He a good husband, a good housewife she. Dryd.
Early housewives leave the bed,
When living embers on the hearth are spread.

The fairest among the daughters of Britain shew themselves good stateswomen as well as good housewives. Addison.

3. One skilled in female business.

He was bred up under the tuition of a tender mother, till she made him as good an housewife as herself; he could preserve apricocks, and make jellies. Addison.

HO'USEWIFELY. adv. [from housewife.]
With the economy of a careful woman.

HO'USEWIFERY. adj. [from housewife.]
Skilled in the acts becoming a housewife.

now added to saddles as ornamental.

HO'USING. adj. [from house.] Provided for entertainment at first entrance into a house; housewarming.

His own two hands the bely knot did knit,
That none but death for ever can divide;
His own two hands, for such a turn most fit,
The housing fire did kindle and provide.
Fairy Queen.

HO'USS. n. f. [from houffaux, or bouffes, French.] Covering of cloth originally used to keep off dirt, now added to saddles as ornamental; housings. This word, though used by Dryden, I do not remember in any other place.

Six hours' hides with things together fast,
His upper parts defended to his waist;
And where man ended, the continu'd vest,
Spread on his back, the houss and trappings of a beast. Dryden.

HOW. adv. [hu, Saxon; hoe, Dutch.]

1. To what degree.

How long wilt thou refuse to humble thyself before me? Exodus.

How much better is it to get wisdom than gold?
and to get understanding, rather to be chosen than silver? Proverbs.

How oft is the candle of the wicked put out?
And how oft cometh their destruction upon them?
Job.

O how love I thy law, it is my meditation.
Psalms.

How many children's plaints and mother's cries! How many

How many woeful widows left to howl
To sad disgrace! Daniel's Civil War.

Consider into how many differing substances it may be analysed by the fire. Boyle.

2. In what manner.

Mark'd you not,
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence'
death? Shakespeare.

Prosecute the means of thy deliverance
By ransom, or how else. Milton's Agonistes.

We examine the why and the how of things.
L'Estrange.

'Tis much in our power how to live, but not at all when or how to die. L'Estrange.

It is pleasant to see how the small territories of this little republic are cultivated to the best advantage. Addison on Italy.

3. For what reason; from what cause.

How now, my love? Why is your cheek so pale?

How chance the roses there do fade so fast?
Shakespeare.

How is it thou hast found it so quickly? Gen.

4. By what means.

Men would have the colours of birds feathers,
if they could tell how: or they will have gay skins instead of gay clothes. Bacon.

5. In what state.

For how shall I go up to my father? Genesis.

Whence am I forc'd, and whither am I born?
How, and with what reproach shall I return?
Dryden's Æneid.

6. It is used in a sense marking proportion or correspondence.

Behold, he put no trust in his servants, how much less in them that dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust? Job.

A great division fell among the nobility, so much the more dangerous by how much the spirits were more active and high. Hayward.

HOW

By how much they would diminish the present extent of the sea, so much they would increase the fertility, and fountains and rivers of the earth.
Bentley.

7. It is much used in exclamation.

How are the mighty fallen! Samuel.
How doth the city sit solitary as a widow! Lorr.

8. In an affirmative sense, not easily explained; that so it is; that.

Thick clouds put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South-sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents. Bacon.

HOWE'IT. } adv. [how be it.] Neverthe-HOWE'ER. } less; notwithstanding; yet;
however. Not in use.

Siker thou speak'st like a lewd torrel,
Of heaven to deemest thou,

Howe'er I am but rude and boresel,
Yet nearer ways I know. Spenser.

Things so ordained are to be kept, howe'er not necessarily, any longer than 'till there grow some urgent cause to ordain the contrary. Hobbes.

There is a knowledge which God hath always revealed unto them in the works of nature: this they honour and esteem highly as profound wif-dom, howe'er this wisdom saveth them not.

There was no army transmitted out of England, howe'er the English colonies in Ireland did win ground upon the Irish. Darwin.

HOWE'YS. [contracted from how do ye.]

In what state is your health? A message of civility.

I now write no letters but of plain business, or plain howe'ys, so those few I am forced to correspond with. Pope.

HOWE'VER. adv. [how and ever.]

1. In whatsoever manner; in whatsoever degree.

This ring he holds
In most rich choice; yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
Howe'er repented of. Shakespeare.

To trace the ways
Of highest agents, deem'd howe'er wise. Milton.

2. At all events; happen what will; at least.

Our chief end is to be freed from all, if it may be, howe'er from the greatest evils; and to enjoy, if it may be, all good, howe'er the chiefest.
Tillotson.

3. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet.

In your excuse your love does little say;
You might howe'er have took a fairer way.
Dryden.

Its views are bounded on all sides by several ranges of mountains, which are howe'er at so great a distance, that they leave a wonderful variety of beautiful prospects. Addison.

I do not build my reasoning wholly on the case of persecution, howe'er I do not exclude it.
Atterbury.

Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end;
which would, howe'er, be a very useful enquiry.
Swift.

4. To some of these meanings this word may be commonly reduced, but its power is sometimes almost evanescent.

To HOWL. v. n. [huglen, Dutch; ululo,
Latin.]

1. To cry as a wolf or dog.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howl'd in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise
I trembling wak'd. Shakespeare's Richard III.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key. Shakespeare.

He found him in a desert land, and in the white howling wilderness. Deuteronomy.

HUC

As when a sort of wolves infect the night,
With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light.

Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,
Fierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;
He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns.

2. To utter cries in distress.

Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab.

The damned use that word in hell,
Howlings attend it.

New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows
Strike Heaven on the face.

That would be howl'd out in the deaf air,
Where hearing should not catch them.

Ranting of armour, trumpets, drums and ataballes;
And sometimes peals of shouts that read the heavens.

Like victory: then groans again, and howlings
Like those of vanquish'd men

3. To speak with a belline cry or tone.

Peace, monster, peace! Go tell thy horrid tale
To savages, and howl it out in dangers!

4. It is used poetically of many noises loud and horrid.

Howl. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The cry of a wolf or dog.

Alarm'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch.

2. The cry of a human being in horror.

She raves, she runs with a distracted pace,
And fills with horrid howls the public place.

Howsoever. adv. [how and forever.]

1. In what manner forever. See HOWEVER.

Berulius, who, after Moses, was one of the most ancient, howsoever he hath been since corrupted, doth in the substance of all agree.

2. Although.

The man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him.

To HOG. v. a. [from hog, Saxon.] To hough; to hamstring.

Which hares honesty behind, restraining
From course required.

Lodronius, perceiving the old soldier's meaning, alighted, and with his sword boxed his horse, saying aloud, This day, valiant soldiers, shall you have me both your general and fellow soldier, fighting on foot as one of yourselves.

HOY. n. f. [how, old French.] A large boat sometimes with one deck.

He sent to Germany, strange aid to rear:
From whence esthons arrived here three hoyes
Of Saxons, whom he for his safety employs.

To define a barge and hoy, which are between a boat and a ship, is hard.

HU'BUB. n. f. [I know not the etymo- logy, unless it be from up, up, or bobnob.] A tumult; a riot.

People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or recognition, but the actors were really of the dress of the people.

An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd, Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
With loudest vehemence.

HU'CKABACK. n. f. A kind of linen on which the figures are raised.

HUD

HU'CKLEBACKED. adj. [bocker, German, a bunch, and back.] Crooked in the shoulders.

HU'CKLEBONE. n. f. [from bucken, Dut.
to sit down.] The hipbone.

HU'CKSTER. } n. f. [bock, German, a HU'CKSTERER. } pedlar; hockster, a thepedlar.]

1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.

There cannot be a more ignominious trade than the being hucksters to such vile merchandise.

God deliver the world from such guides, or rather such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion.

Should thy shoe wrench aside, down, down
you fall,

And overturn the scolding huckster's stall,
The scolding huckster shall not o'er thee moan,
But pence expect for nuts and pears o'erbrown.

There should be a confederacy of all servants,
to drive those China hucksters from the doors.

Those hucksters or money-jobbers will be found necessary, if this brain-money is made current.

2. A trickish mean fellow.

Now the ape wanted his huckster man.

To HU'CKSTER. v. n. [from the noun.]

To deal in petty bargains.

They must pay a shilling, for changing their piece into silver, to some huckstering fellow who follows that trade.

To HU'DDLE. v. a. [probably from hood.]

1. To dress up close so as not to be dis- covered; to mottle.

2. To put on carelessly in a hurry.

At twelve she rose with much ado;
Her cloaths were huddl'd on by two.

Now all in haste they huddle on Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone.

3. To cover up in haste.

4. To perform in a hurry.

I have given much application to this poem:
this is not a play huddled up in haste.

The lab'ring husband in his house refrain,
Let him forecast his work with timely care,
Which else is huddled when the skies are fair.

5. To throw together in confusion.

Our adversary, huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion.

To HU'DDLE. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.

Glance an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back

Enough to press a royal merchant down.

Tuyfiss, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every musknote of the dale.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others;
for they will run against things, and, huddling forwards, fall from high places.

HU'DDLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion; with obscurity.

That the Aristotelian philosophy is a huddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wise.

Your carrying business in a huddle,
Has forc'd our rulers to new model.

HUF

Several merry answers were made to my question, which entertained us 'till bed-time, and filled my mind with a huddle of ideas.

HUE. n. f. [hiepe, Saxon.]

1. Colour; die.

For never in that land
Face of fair lady the before did view,
Or that dread Lyon's look her cast in deadly hue.

To add another hue unto the rainbow,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue,
Answer'd,

Your's is much of the camelion hue,
To change the die with distant view.

2. {hue, French.] A clamour; a legal pursuit; an alarm given to the country.

It is commonly joined with cry.
Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight I am undone: fly, run, hue and cry! villain, I am undone.

Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road.

If you should hiss, he (wears he'll hiss as high;
And, like a culprit, join the hue and cry.

HUE'R. n. f. [huer, French, to cry.] One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a barker or huer, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence discerneth the course of the pichard.

HUFF. n. f. [from hove, or hoven, swel- led: he is huffed up by distempers.] So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to heave or ferment: huff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance.

Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word
To swear by, only in a lord;
In others it is but a huff,

To vapour with instead of proof.

His frowns kept multitudes in awe,
Before the bluster of whose huff
All hats, as in a storm, flew off.

We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very huff of our greatness.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.

As for you, colonel huff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater puffer.

Lewd shallow-brained huffs make atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit.

To HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To swell; to puff.

In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe.

2. To hector; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.

The commissioner at Magdalen college said to
Dr. Hough, you must not presume to huff us.

To HUFF. v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.

HUG

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him.
Orway

A thief and justice, fool and knave,
A huffing officer and slave.
Hudibras.
Huffing to cowards, fawning to the brave,
To knaves a fool, to cred'ulous fools a knave.
Roscommon.

This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them.
South.
Now what 's his end? O charming glory say!
What, a fifth act to crown his huffing play?
Dryden.

What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with.
Lake.

When Peg received John's message, she huff-
ed and stormed like the devil.
Arbuthnot.

HU'FFER. n. f. [from huff.] A bluster-er; a bully.

Nor have I hazarded my art
To be expos'd i' th' end to suffer,
By such a braggadocio huffer.
Hudibras.

HU'FFISH. adj. [from huff.] Arrogant;
insolent; hectoring.

HU'FFISHLY. adv. [from huffish.] With arrogant petulance; with bullying blufter.

HU'FFISHNESS. n. f. Petulance; arrogance; noisy bluster.

TO HUG. v. a. [hexian, Saxon, to hedge,
to enclose.]

1. To press close in an embrace.

He bewept my fortune,
And hugg'd me in his arms.
Shakspeare.
What would he do now to hug the creature that had given him so admirable a serenade?
L'Estrange.

Ev'n in that urn their brother they confest,
And hug it in their arms, and to their bosom press.
Dryden.
King Xerxes was enamoured upon an oak,
which he would hug and kiss.
Harvey.

2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glossing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unpalatable,
Win me into the easy hearted man,
And hug him into snare.
Milton.
We hug deformities, if they bear our names.
Glanville.

Admire yourself,
And, without rival, hug your darling book.
Roscommon.

Though they know that the flatterer knows the falsehood of his own flatteries, yet they love
the impostor, and with both arms hug the abuse.
South.

Mask with what joy he hugs the dear discovery!
Rowe.

3. To hold fast.

Age makes us most fondly hug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them.
Atterbury.

4. To gripe in wrestling.

HUG. n. f. [from the noun.]

1. Close embrace.

Why these close hugs? I owe my shame to him.
Gay.

2. A particular gripe in wrestling, called a Conniff hug.

HUGE. adj. [boogh, high, Dutch.]

1. Vast; immense.

Let the state of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford; and who seeth not what huge difference there was between them?
Hosier.

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalleth in greatness not only Asia, Europe, and Africa, but America.
Abbot.

HUL

2. Very great.

The mountain hugs.
Milton.
Part, hugs of bulk!

Wallowing unweildy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean; there Leviathan
Hugs of living creatures, in the deep Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land.
Milton.

3. Great even to deformity or terribleness.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder.
Shakspeare.

Through forests hugs, and long unravell'd heaths,
With desolation brown he wanders waste.
Thomson.

HU'GRY. adv. [from hug.]

1. Immensely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea?
Shakspeare.

2. Greatly; very much.

I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourselves in our affairs, it is for our good.
Swift.

HU'GENESS. n. f. [from hug.]

1. Enormous bulk; greatness.

2. Utmost extent. Not in use.

My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness
of your unworthy thinking.
Shakspeare.

HU'GGERMUGGER. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from bigger morcher, or hug in the dark. Morcher in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by sir Thomas Moore, boker moker. Höker, in Chaucer, is pervis, crossgrained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hooke is likewise in German a corner, and moky is in English dark. I know not how to determine.]
Secrecy; by-place.

Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of floods and land.
Hubberd's Tale.

But if I can but find them out,
Where'er th' in huggermugger lurk,
I'll make them rue their handy work.
Hudibras.
There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and bare-faced, and a thing that's done in huggermugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment.
L'Estrange.

HU'GY. adj. [See HUGE.] Vast; great;
hug. Not in use.

This hugy rock one finger's force apparently will move.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HURE. n. f. [buque, French.] A cloak.
As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger, in a rich hure.
Bacon's New Atlantis.

HULK. n. f. [bulcke, Dutch; hulk, Sax.]

1. The body of a ship.

There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold.
Shakspeare.

The custom of giving the colour of the sea to the hulks, sails, and mariners of their fly-boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Venetians.
Arbuthnot.

The Argo's hulk will tax,
And scrape her piteous sides for wax.
Swift.

The footy hulk
Steer'd sluggish on.
Thomson.

2. Any thing bulky and unweildy. This sense is still retained in Scotland: as, a bulk of a fellow.

And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk fir
John,
Is prisoner to your son.
Shakspeare.

TO HULK. v. a. To exentrate: as, to bulk a hare.
Ainsworth.

HUM

HULL. n. f. [bulgan, Gothick, to cover.]

1. The husk or integument of any thing;
the outer covering: as, the hull of a nut covers the shell. [hufe, Scoetish.]

2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and bulk are now confounded; but bulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.
Dryden.

So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a thinking creature.
Grew.

TO HULL. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

They saw a fight full of piteous strangeness;
a ship, or rather the carcase of a ship, or rather some few bones of the carcase, hulling there, part broken, part burned, and part drowned.
Sidney.

Will you hoist sail, fir? here lies your way.
— No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer.
Shakspeare.
He look'd, and saw the ark hull on the flood.
Milton.

People walking down upon the shore, saw somewhat come hulling toward them.
L'Estrange.

HU'LV. adj. [from hull.] Siliqueose;
husky.
Ainsworth.

HU'LV. n. f. Holly.

Save hulver and thorn, thereof sail for to make.
Tupper.

TO HUM. v. a. [homelan, Dutch.]

1. To make the noise of bees.

The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing.
Bacon.
An airy nation flew Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew.
Dryden.

In summer's heat.
So weary bees in little cells repose;
But if night-robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waken city grows.
Dryden.

2. To make an inarticulate and buzzing sound.

I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhears me.
Shakspeare.

Upon my honour, fir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me.

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, you'll rue.
Shakspeare.

3. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,
And hum'd upon it, thus he writ.
Hudibras.
I still acquiesc,

And never hum'd and haw'd sedition,
Nor snuttled treason.
Hudibras.

The man lay humming and hawing a good while; but in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians.
L'Estrange.

4. To make a dull heavy noise.

The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate *humming*s; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs.
Glanville.

Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,
And last'd so long, like tops, are last'd asleep.
Pope.

5. To sing low.

Hum half a tune.
Pope.

6. To applaud. Approbation was commonly expressed in public assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.

HUM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of bees or insects.

To black Hecat's summon
The shard-born beetle, with his drowy hums
Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakespeare.
Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
To him who mufes through the woods at noon. Thomson.

2. A low confused noise, as of bustling crowds at a distance.

From camp to camp, thro' the foul womb of
night,
The hum of either army still refounds. Shaksp.
Tower'd cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men. Milton.
One theatre there is of vast resort,
Which whilom of requests was call'd the court;
But now the great exchange of news 'tis hight,
And full of hum and buz from noon 'till night. Dryden.

3. Any low dull noise.

Who sat the nearest, by the words o'ercome,
Slept fast: the distant nodded to the hum. Pope.

4. A pause with an inarticulate sound.

These shugs, these hums and haws,
When you have said the 's goodly, come between,
Ere you can say the 's honest. Shakespeare.
Your excuses want some grains to make 'em current: hum and ha will not do the business. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. In Hudibras it seems used for hum.

And though his countrymen the Huns,
Did stew their meat between their hums,
And the horses backs, on which they straddle,
And ev'ry man eat up his saddle. Hudibras.

6. An expression of applause.

You hear a hum in the right place. Spectator.
HUM. interject. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.

Let not your eyes despise the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

—Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
See Sir Robert—hum!

And never laugh for all my life to come. Pope.

HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Lat. humain, French.]

1. Having the qualities of a man.

It will never be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature? Swift.

2. Belonging to man.

The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakespeare.
For man to tell how human life begin
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew? Milton.

Thee, serpent, subtil'st beast of all the field,
I knew; but not with human voice indu'd. Milt.

Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any, this being the highest of all human certainty. Locke.

HUMANE. adj. [humaine, Fr.] Kind;

civil; benevolent; good-natured.
Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few,
doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable. Bacon.

Envy, malice, covetousness and revenge are abolished: a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more humane, are planted in their stead. Sprat.

HUMANELY. adv. [humane, Fr.] Kindly; with good-nature.

If they would yield us the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shakespeare.

HUMANIST. n. f. [humaniste, Fr.] A philologer; a grammarian: a term used in the schools of Scotland.HUMANITY. n. f. [humanité, Fr. humanitas, Latin.]

1. The nature of man,

Look to thyself: reach not beyond humanity. Sidney.

A rarer spirit never did flee humanity. Shak.
The middle of humanity thou never knewest,
but the extremity of both ends. Shakespeare.
To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.

2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.

If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his information. Glennville.

3. Benevolence; tenderness.

All men ought to maintain peace and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke.

How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And court the offices of soft humanity?
Like thee reserve their timent for the naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep? Roscoe.

4. Philology; grammatical studies. In Scotland, humaniores litteræ.

To HUMANIZE. v. a. [humaniser, Fr.]
To soften; to make susceptible of tenderness or benevolence.

Here will I paint the characters of woe,
And here my faithful tears in show'rs shall flow.
To humanize the fints whereon I read. Watson.

Was it the business of magick to humanize our natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Addison.

HUMANITY. n. f. [human and kind.]

The race of man; mankind.
Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and humankind. Pope.

HUMANLY. adv. [from human.]1. After the notions of men; according to the power of men.

Thus the present happy prospect of our affairs,
humanly speaking, may seem to promise. Atterbury.

2. Kindly; with good-nature. This is now written humanely.

Though learn'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere;
Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope.

HUMBIRD. n. f. [from hum and bird.]

The humming bird.
All ages have conceived the wren the least of birds, yet our own plantations have shew'd one far less; that is, the humbird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown.

HUMBLE. adj. [humble, Fr. humilis, Lat.]

1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.

And mighty proud to humble weak does yield. Spenser.

Now we have shewn our power,
Let us seem humble after it is done,
Than when it was a-doing. Shakespeare.

Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And faithful service, 'till the point of death. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

We should be as humble in our imperfections and sins, as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life. Taylor.

You, if an humble husband, may request,
Provide and order all things for the best. Dryd.

Ten thousand trifles light as these,
Nor can my rage nor anger move:
She should be humble who would please;
And she must suffer, who can love. Prior.

2. Low; not high; not great.

Th' example of the beastly lark,
Thy fellow-poet, Cowley, mark!
Above the skies let thy proud musick sound,
Thy humbles nest build on the ground. Cowley.
Denied what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,
An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Yalden.

Ah! prince, hadst thou but known the joys which dwell

With humbler fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty! Roscoe.

Far humbler titles suit my lust conditions. Smith.

To HUMBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]1. To make humble; to make submissive;
to make to bow down with humility.

Take this purse, thou whom the heav'n's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes. Shakespeare.

The executioner
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon. Shakespeare.

Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you. 1 Peter.

Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart. 2 Chronicles.

Why do I humble thus myself, and tunc
For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate? Milton.

Let the sinner put away the evil of his doings,
and humble himself by a speedy and sincere repentance; let him return to God, and then let him be assured that God will return to him. Rogers.

2. To crush; to break; to subdue; to mortify.

Yearly injoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride and joy, for man seduc'd. Milton.

We are pleas'd by some implicit kind of revenge, to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, who had so far raised himself above us. Addison.

The mistress of the world, the seat of empire,
The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,
That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth. Addison's Cato.

Men that make a kind of insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the public tranquillity. Frecholder.

Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;
Though double tax'd, how little have I lost! Pope.

3. To make to condescend.

This would not be to condescend to their capacities, when he humbles himself to speak to them, but to lose his dignity in speaking. Locke.

4. To bring down from a height.

In process of time the highest mountains may be humbled into valleys; and again, the lowest valleys exalted into mountains. Hakewill.

HUMBLEBEE. n. f. [humble and bee.]

What may be the true etymology of this word I am in doubt. The humble-bee is known to have no sting. The Scotch call a cow without horns a humble cow; so that the word seems to signify inermis, wanting the natural weapons. Dr. Beattie. A buzzing wild bee.

The honeybags steal from the humblebees,
And for night tapers crop their waxen thighs. Shakespeare.

This puts us in mind once again, of the humblebees and the tinderboxes. Atterbury.

HUMBLEBEE. n. f. An herb. *Ainslee.HUMBLEBEE EATER. n. f. A fly that eats the humblebee. *Ainsworth.HUMBLENESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humility; absence of pride.

With how true humbleness
They look'd down to triumph over pride! Sidney.

I am rather with all subjected humbleness, to thank her excellencies, since the duty thereunto gave me rather heart to save myself, than to receive thanks. Sidney.

It was answered by us all, in all possible hu-

HUM

Mess; but yet with a countenance, that we knew he spoke it but merrily. Bacon.
A grain of glory, mixed with humbleness, Cures both a fever and lethargickness. Herbert.

HU'MBLER. n. f. [from humble.] One that humbles or subdues himself or others.

HU'MBLEMOUTHED. adj. [bumble and moulted.] Mild; meek.

You are meek and humblemouth'd: but your heart

Is cramm'd with arrogance, spleen, and pride. Shakespeare

HU'MBLEPLANT. n. f. A species of sensitive plant.

The humbleplant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, it prostrates itself on the ground, and in a short time elevates itself again: it is raised in hotbeds. Mortimer

HU'MBLES. n. f. Entrails of a deer.

HU'MBLESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humbleness; humility. Obsolete.

And with meek humbleness, and afflicted mind, Pardon for thee, and grace for me intreat Spenser.

HU'MBLY. adv. [from humble.]

1. Without pride; with humility; modestly; with timorous modesty.

They were us'd to bend,
To send their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come humbly as they us'd to creep to holy altars. Shakespeare.

Here the fam'd Euphrates humbly glides
And there the Rhine submits her swelling tides. Dryden.

Write him down a slave, who, humbly proud,
With presents begs preferments from the crowd. Dryden.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death,
Thy goodness I'll adore;
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humbly hope for more. Addison.

2. Without height; without elevation.

HU'MDRUM. adj. [from hum, drone, or humming drone.] Dull; dronish; stupid.

Shall we, quoth she, stand still humdrum,
And see stout Ruin, all alone,
By numbers safely overthrow? Hutches.

I was talking with an old humdrum fellow, and, before I had heard his story out, was called away by business. Addison.

To HUME'CT. } v. a. [humectio,

To HUME'CTATE. } Lat. humectare,
French.] To wet; to moisten.

The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and temperate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate the earth by their annual inundations. Brown.

Her rivers are divided into sluices, to humectate the bordering soil. Howell's Vocal Forest.

The medicaments are of a cool humecting quality, and not too much astringent. Wifeman.

HUME'CTA'TION. n. f. [humectation, Fr. from humectare.] The act of wetting; moistening.

Plates of blafs, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling: the cause is repercussion, without humectation, or entrance of any body. Bacon's Natural History.

That which is concentered by exhalation, or ex-pression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation, as earth and clay. Brown

HU'MERAL. adj. [humeral, French, from humerus, Latin.] Belonging to the shoulder.

The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation. Sharp.

HUMICUBA'TION. n. f. [humi and cubo,

HUM

Latin.] The act of lying on the ground.

Falling and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humicubations, used to be companions of repentance. Beauchamp.

HUMID. adj. [humide, French; humidus, Latin.] Wet; moist; watery.

It is there, with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers of more mingl'd hue
Than her purpl'd scarf can show. Milton.

The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes,
And first her husband on the poop espies.
If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opticks.

HUMIDITY. n. f. [humidité, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies.

Humidity differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to; but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water itself, that wets almost every thing, and is the great standard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing, for it stands and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watry pumption. Shakespeare.

O blessing-breeding sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: blow thy sister's osh Infect the air! Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and relishing. Arbuthnot.

HUMILIA'TION. n. f. [French.]

1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker.

Thy humiliation shall exalt
With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milton.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.

John fared poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

With tears
Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.

3. Abatement of pride.

It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.

HUMILITY. n. f. [humilité, French.]

1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

HUM

I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility. Shakespeare.
What the height of a king tempteth to revenge,
the humility of a christian teacheth to forgive. King Charles.

The humility of the style gained them many friends. Clarendon.

There are some that use Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their with'd journey's end. Denham.

It is an easy matter to extol humility in the midst of honour, or to begin a fast after dinner. South.

As high towers for their airy sleep,
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot;
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

2. Act of submission.

With these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided the present storm. Davies.

HU'MMER. n. f. [from hum.] That which hums; an applauder. Ainsworth.

HU'MORAL. adj. [from humour.] Proceeding from the humours.

This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey on Consumptions.

HU'MORIST. n. f. [humorista, Italian; humoriste, French.]

1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watts.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives his superfluities to purchase heaven. Addison.

2. One who has odd conceits.

The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist. Spectator.

3. One who has violent and peculiar passions.

By a wife and timorous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon to Villiers.

HU'MOROUS. adj. [from humour.]

1. Full of grotesque or odd images.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Marysa was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the satirist Marysas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.

I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never fight

But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To touch thee safely. Shakespeare's King John.

He's humorous as winter, and as sudden
As flaws congeal'd in the spring of day. Shaksp.

O, you awake then: come away,
Times be short, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not stay:
What doth make you thus delay? Ben Jonson.

Walt is his courage, boundless in his mind,
Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind. Dryden.

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts' Logic.

3. Pleasant; jocular.

Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot;
And pensive, way'ring, melancholy,
Thou dread'st it and hop'st thou know'st it not what.
Prior.

HU'MOROUSLY. adj. [from humorous.]

1. Merrily; jocosely.

A cabinet of medals Juvenal calls very humorously, concisum argenteum in titulis facisque minutis.
Addison.

It has been humorously said, that some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit.
Swift.

2. Capriciously; whimsically.

We resolve by halves, and unadvisedly; we resolve rashly, fitilly, or humorously, upon no reasons that will hold.
Calamy.

HU'MOROUSNESS. n. f. [from humorous.]

1. Fickleness; capricious levity.

2. Jocularly; oddness of conceit.

HU'MOROUSNESS. adj. [from humorous.]

1. Peevish; petulant.

2. Odd; humorous. In this sense it is less used.

Our science cannot be much improved by masquerades, where the wit of both sexes is altogether taken up in continuing singular and humorous disguises.
Swift.

HU'MOROUSLY. adv. [from humorous.]

1. Peevishly; petulantly.

HU'MOUR. n. f. [humour, Fr. humor, Latin.]

1. Moisture.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water.
Ray.

2. The different kinds of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper of mind.

Believe not these suggestions, which proceed from anguish of the mind and humours black,
That mingle with thy fancy.
Milton.

3. General turn or temper of mind.

As there is no humour to which impudent poverty cannot make itself serviceable; so were there enow of those of desperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin.
Sidney.

There came a young lord, led with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whose goodness he sees not.
Sidney.

King James, as he was a prince of great judgment, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humour: as he was going through Lufen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was? they said Lufen. He asked, a good while after, what town it was now in? They said still it was Lufen: then, said the king, I will be king of Lufen.
Racon's Asprothegms.

Examine how your humour is inclin'd,
And which the ruling passion of your mind.
Resonance.

They, who were acquainted with him, know his humour to be such, that he would never constrain himself.
Dryden.

In cases where it is necessary to make examples, it is the humour of the multitude to forget the crime, and to remember the punishment.
Addison.

Good humour only teaches charms to list,
Still makes new conquests, and maintains the path.
Pope.

4. Present disposition.

It is the curse of kings to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break into the blood-house of life.
Another thought her nobler humour fed.
Fairfax.

Their humours are not to be won,
But when they are impos'd upon.
Hudibras.

Tempt not his heavy hand;
But one submissive word which you let fall,
Will make him in good humour with us all.
Dryden.

5. Grotesque imagery; jocularly; merriment.

In conversation humour is more than wit, enforces more than knowledge.
Temple.

6. Tendency to disease; morbid disposition.

He denied himself nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humours, and made his fits of the gout frequent and violent.
Temple.

The child had a humour which was cured by the waters of Glastonbury.
Fielding.

7. Petulance; peevishness.

Is my friend all perfection, all virtue and discretion? Has he not humours to be endured, as well as kindnesses to be enjoyed?
Smith.

8. A trick; a practice.

I like not the humour of lying: he hath wronged me in some humours: I should have borne the humour'd letter to her.
Shakespeare.

9. Caprice; whim; predominant inclination.

In private, men are more bold in their own humours; and in company, men are more obsequious to others humours; therefore it is good to take both.
Bacon.

TO HU'MOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gratify; to soothe by compliance.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow.
Shakespeare.

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius, He should not humour me.
Shakespeare.

Obedience and subjection were never enjoined by God to humour the passions, lusts and vanities of those who are commanded to obey our governors.
Swift.

You humour me, when I am sick;
Why not when I'm splenetick?
Pope.

Children are fond of something which strikes their fancy most, and sullen and regardless of every thing else, if they are not humoured in that fancy.
Watts' Logic.

2. To fit; to comply with.

To after age thou shalt be writ the man,
That with smooth air could humour best our tongue.
Milton.

'Tis my part to invent, and the musicians to humour that invention. Dryd. Preface to Albion Fontainebleau is situated among rocks and woods, that give a fine variety of savage prospects: the king has humoured the genius of the place, and only made use of so much art as is necessary to regulate nature.
Addison.

HUMP. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from bump. See BUMP.]

The protuberance formed by a crooked back.

These defects were mended by matches; the eyes were opened in the next generation, and the hump fell.
Tatler.

HUMPBACED. n. f. [hump and back.]

Crooked back; high shoulders.

The chief of the family was born with a hump-back and very high nose.
Tatler.

HUMPBACED. adj. Having a crooked back.TO HUNCH. v. a. [hunch, German.]

1. To strike or punch with the fists.

Jack's friends began to hunch and push one another why don't you go and cut the poor fellow down?
Arbutnot.

His person deformed to the highest degree, flat-nosed, and hunchbacked.
L'Estrange.

But I more fear Creon!
To take that hunchback'd monster in my arms,
Th' excrescence of a man. Dryd. and Let's Oedip.

The second daughter was peevish, haggard, pale, with saucer-eyes, a sharp nose, and hunchbacked.
Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

HU'NDRED. adj. [humb, and hundreb, Saxon; bonderd, Dutch.]

The number consisting of ten multiplied by ten.

A hundred altars in her temple smoke,
A thousand bleeding hearts her pow'r invoke.
Dryden's Æneid.

Many thousands had seen the transactions of our Saviour, and many hundred thousands received an account of them from the mouths of those who were eye-witnesses.
Addison.

HU'NDRED. n. f.

1. A company, body, or collection consisting of a hundred.

Very few will take this proposition, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle: who-soever does so, will have reason to think hundreds of propositions innate.
Lacks.

Lands, taken from the enemy, were divided into centuries or hundreds, and distributed among the soldiers.
Arbutnot.

2. A canton or division of a county, perhaps once containing a hundred manors. [hundredum, low Latin; hundrede, old French.]

Imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire.
Bacon.

For justice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket usually sat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raised: here complaints were exhibited.
Hayes.

HU'NDREDTH. adj. [hundneontezopa, Saxon.] The ordinal of a hundred; the tenth ten times told.

We shall not need to use the hundredth part of that time, which themselves bestow in making inventions.
Hooker.

If this medium is rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundredth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop.
Newton.

HUNG. The pret. and part. pass. of hang.

A wife so hung with virtues, such a freight,
What mortal shoulders can support?
Dryden.

A room that is richly adorned, and hung round with a great variety of pictures, strikes the eye at once.
Watts.

HUNGER. n. f. [hunger, Sax. bonger, Dutch.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.

An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food. When the stomach is empty and the fibres in their natural tension, they draw up to close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation: but when they are distended with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to coagulate, and then we say a person has fasted away his stomach.
Quincy.

Thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger and in thirst.
Druce's Ode.

The subacid part of the animal spirits, being cast off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the stomach, vellebrates the fibres, and thereby produces the sense we call hunger.
Grew.

Something viscous, fat and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the sensation of hunger.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

HUN

1. Any violent desire.

The immaterial felicitates we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hunger for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.
For hunger of my gold I dye. Dryden.

HUNGER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.

My more having, would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Widely they gape, and to the eye they roar,
As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Cowley.

2. To desire with great eagerness; to long.

Dost thou hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours,
Before thy hour be ripe? O, foolish youth,
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!
Stay but a little. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

I content me,
And from the sting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed
Me hungering more to do my Father's will. Milton.

HUNGERBIT. } adj. [hunger and HUNGERBITTEN. } bit.] Pained or weakened with hunger.

His strength shall be hungerbitten. Job.
Thyself

Bred up in poverty and straits at home;
Lost in a desert here, and hungerbit. Milton.

Grew thin and hungerly, and seem'd to ask
His sops as he was drinking. Shakspeare.

HUNGERLY. adv. With keen appetite.
You have sav'd my longing, and I feed
Most hungerly on your sight. Shakspeare.
They are all but stomachs, and we all but
food;

They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,
They belch us. Shakspeare.

HUNGERSTARVED. adj. [hunger and starved.] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

All my followers to th' eager foe
Turn back, and fly like sheep before the wind,
Or lambs pursu'd by hungerstarved wolves. Shakspeare.
Go, go, cheer up thy hungerstarved men. Shakspeare.

As to some holy house th' afflicted came,
Th' hungerstarved, the naked, and the lame,
Want and diseases, fled before her name. Dryden.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.] Pinched by want of food.

Odours do in a small degree nourish, and we see men hungry love to smell hot bread. Bacon.

HUNGRILY. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd suffering mortals long ago;
When on hard acorns hungrily they fed,
And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread. Dryden.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood. Shakspeare.

By eating before he was hungry, and drinking before he was dry, he was sure never to eat or drink much at a time. Temple.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it;
whereas hunger consists in that very sensation. Locke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolific; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.

HUN

The more fat water will bear (so best); for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon.

In rushy grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.

To the great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here sow in the most hungry and barren soil. Smalridge.

HUNKS. n. f. [hunger, fordid, Islandick.] A covetous fordid wretch; a miser; a curmudgeon.

The old hunks was well served, to be tricked out of a whole hog for the securing of his puddings. L'Estrange.

She has a husband, a jealous, covetous, old hunks. Dryden.

Irus has given all the intimations of being a close hunks, worth money. Addison.

HUNT. v. a. [hunter, Sax. from hund, a dog.]

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did fell the lion's skin,
While the best liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him. Shakspeare.

Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job.

We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison.

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Psalms.

The heart strikes five hundred sorts of pulses in an hour, and is hunted unto such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that pain would it break. Harvey on Consumptions.

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Spenser.

All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from principles: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison.

HUNT. v. n.

On the old pagan tombs, masks, hunting matches, and bacchanals are very common. Addison on Italy.

2. To pursue or search.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd

By sovereign pow'r, her company disdain'd, Grin'd as they pass'd. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

2. A chase.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakspeare.

3. Pursuit.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree
Escap'd the hunt. Shakspeare's King Lear.

HUNTER. n. f. [from hunt.]

HUR

1. One who chases animals for pastime or food.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, boggs, and woods within the limits of forests, chaces and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies on Ireland.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milton.
Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden's Æneid.

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a pudge of Manlius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron. Addison on Italy.

Bold Nimrod first the savage chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that scents game or beasts of prey.

Of dogs, the valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakspeare.

HUNTINGHORN. n. f. [hunting and horn.] A bugle; a horn used to cheer the hounds.

Whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

HUNTRESS. n. f. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway. Shakspeare.

Shall I call

Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?

Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow, Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope.

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Brown.

HUNTSMAN. n. f. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chase.

Like as a huntsman, after weary chase,
Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser's Sonnets.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What huntsman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chase? Waller.

2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chase.

Apply this moral rather to the huntsman, that managed the chase, than to the matter. L'Estrange.

HUNTSMANSHIP. n. f. [from huntsman.]
The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give the art of rhyming, huntsmanship, or play. Dennis.

HURDLE. n. f. [hynbel, Saxon.]

1. A texture of sticks woven together; a crate.

The sled, the tumble, hurdles and the flail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden's George.

2. Crate on which criminals were dragged to execution.

Settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither. Shakspeare.
The blacksmith was hanged, drawn, and quarter'd at Tyburn; taking pleasure upon the hur- dle, to think that he should be famous in after-times. Bacon.

HURDS. n. f. The refuse of hemp or flax. Ainsworth.

TO HURL. v. a. [from hurle, to throw down, Islandick; or, according to Skin-ner, from whirl.]

1. To throw with violence; to drive impetuously.

If heav'n's have any grievous plagues in store,
O, let them keep it 'till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee! Shakespeare's Richard III.

He holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

I with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame. Shaksp.

If he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait. Numbers

They use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones. Chronicles.

Hurl ink and wit,
As madmen stones. Ben Jonson.

His darling sons,
Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
Their frail original and faded bliss. Milton.

She strikes the lute; but if it found,
Threatens to hurl it on the ground. Waller.

Corrupted light of knowledge hurl'd
Sin, death, and ignorance, o'er all the world. Denham.

Young Phaeton,
From east to north irregularly hurl'd,
First set himself on fire, and then the world. Dryden's Juvenal.

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,
And hurl'd them headlong to their fleet and main. Pope.

2. To utter with vehemence. [hurler, Fr. to make a howling or hideous noise.] This sense is not in use.

The glad merchant that does view
His ship far come from wat'ry wilderness,
He *hurl*s out vows. Spenser.

Highly they rag'd against the Highest,
Hurling defiance towards the vaults of heav'n. Milton.

3. To play at a kind of game.

Hurling taketh its denomination from throwing of the ball, and is of two sorts; to goals, and to the country: for hurling to goals there are fifteen or thirty players, more or less, chosen out on each side, who strip themselves, and then join hands in ranks, one against another: out of these ranks they match themselves by pairs, one embracing another, and so pass away; every of which couple are to watch one another during this play. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HURL. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult;
riot; commotion.

He in the same hurl murdering such as he thought would withstand his desire, was chosen king. Knolles.

HURLEAT. n. f. [hurl and bat.] Whirlbat. Ainsworth.

HURLER. n. f. [from hurl.] One that plays at hurling.

The hurlers must hurl man to man, and not two set upon one man at once. Carew.

HURLWIND. n. f. [hurl and wind.] A whirlwind; a violent gust. A word not in use.

Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid hurlwinds from his mansion thrown. Sandys.

HURLY. } n. f. [from the Fr. hurluburly, inconfiderately.] Tumult; commotion; bustle.

Winds take the ruffian billows by the top,
That with the hurl death itself awakes. Shaksp.

Pour discontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurluburly innovation. Shaksp.

Metelinks, I see this hurl all on foot. Shaksp.

All places were filled with tumult and hurl- burly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, and in cities presently to be besieged. Knolles.

HURRICANE. } n. f. [huracan, Span.

HURRICANO. } ouragan, Fr.] A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the western hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricanes spout! Shaksp.

A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havock where it comes.

A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and bluf-tering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends withdrew;
There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,
Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison.

HURRIER. n. f. [from hurry.] One that hurries; a disturber.

Mars, that horrid hurrier of men. Chapman.

To HURRY. v. n. [hepstan, to plunder, Saxon: hurs was likewise a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends. Shaksp.

For whom all this haste
Of midnight march, and hurry'd meeting here?

Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy it. South.

That hurry'd o'er
Such swarms of English to the neighb'ring shore. Dryden.

A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage. Addison.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That hurry you away. Rome's Royal Concert.

If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination. Pope.

To HURRY. v. n. To move on with precipitation.

Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not hurry to your journey's end. Dryden.

HURRY. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult;
precipitation; commotion.

Among all the horrible hurries in England,
Ireland was then almost quiet. Hayward.

It might have pleased him in the present heat and hurry of his rage; but must have displeased him infinitely in the iclate reflection. South.

After the violence of the hurry and commotion was over, the water came to a state somewhat more calm. Westward.

Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it inflames the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry of thought. Addison.

A long train of coaches and six ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great hurry. Addison.

I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual hurry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged. Addison.

The pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mist hurry barricades the street. Gay.

HURST. n. f. [hýrst, Saxon.] A grove or thicket of trees. Ainsworth.

To HURT. v. a. pret. I hurt; part.
pass. I have hurt. [hýrt, wounded,
Saxon; beurter, to strike, French.]

1. To mischief; to harm.

He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death. Revelation.

Virtue may be assail'd, but never hurt;
Surpris'd by unjust force, but not surpris'd. Milton.

The Adonis of the sea is so called, because it is a loving and innocent fish, that hurts nothing that has life. Walton.

2. To wound; to pain by some bodily harm.

My heart is turn'd to stone: I strike it, and it hurts my hand. Shaksp.

It breeds contempt
For herds to listen, or presume to pry,
When the hurt lion groans within his den. Dryden.

3. To damage; to impair.

See thou hurt not the oil and wine. Revelation.

HURT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Harm; mischief.

The hurt thereby is greater than the good.

I have slain a man to my hurt. Spenser.

I found it stand there uncorrected, as if there had been no hurt done. Baker on Learning.

2. Wound or bruise.

Where is he wounded?
—There will be large cicatrices to shew the people: he received seven hurts i' th' body. Shaksp.

Carter adventured bravely, and received two great hurts in his body. Hayward.

The pains of sickness and hurts, hunger, thirst and cold, all men feel. Locke.

In arms and science 'tis the same,
Our rival's hurts create our fame. Pride.

3. Injury; wrong.

Why should damage grow to the hurt of the king? Fero.

HURTER. n. f. [from hurt.] One that does harm.

HURTFUL. adj. [hurt and full.] Mischievous; pernicious.

Secret neglect of our duty is but only our own hurt: one man's contempt of the common prayer of the church of God may be most hurtful unto many. Hooker.

The hurtful hawk in the vineyard shun,
Nor plant it to receive the setting sun. Dryden.

HURTFULLY. adv. [from hurtful.] Mischievously; perniciously.

HURTFULNESS. n. f. [from hurtful.]
Mischievousness; perniciousness.

To HURTL. v. n. [hurteur, French;
urtare, Italian.] To clash; to skirmish; to run against any thing; to jostle; to meet in shock and encounter. Hammer.

The noise of battle hurled in the air. Shaksp.

Kindness
Made him give battle to the lions,
Who quickly fell before him; in which hurting,
From miserable slumber I awak'd. Shaksp.

To HURTL. v. a. To move with violence or impetuosity. This is probably the original of hurl. Obsolete.

His harmful club he 'gan to hurtle high,
And threaten battle to the fairy knight. Fairy Queen.

HURTLBERRY. n. f. [biort bar, Dan.]
Bilberry; bacca vitis idae.

HURTLESS. adj. [from hurt.]

1. Innocent; harmless; innoxious; doing no harm.

Unto her home he oft would go,
Where bold and hurtless many a play he tries,
Her parents liking well it should be so;
For simple goodness shined in his eyes. Sidney.
She joy'd to make proof of her cruelty
On gentle dame, to hurtless and so true. Fairy Queen.

Shorter ev'ry gasp he takes,
And vain efforts and hurtless blows he makes. Dryden's Ænoid.

2. Receiving no hurt.

HURTLESSLY. adv. [from hurtless.]
Without harm.

Your neighbours have found you so hurtlessly Strong, that they thought it better to rest in your friendship than make new trial of your enmity. Sidney.

HURTLESSNESS. n. f. [from hurtless.]
Freedom from any pernicious quality.

HUSBAND. n. f. [hofsband, mailler, Danish; from houfe and bonda, Runick,
a master.]

1. The correlative to wife; a man married to a woman.

Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign. Shakspeare.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old limes again: he so takes on yonder with my husband, and so rails against all married mankind. Shak.

This careful husband had been long away,
Whom his chaste wife and little children mourn. Dryden.

The contract and ceremony of marriage is the occasion of the denomination of relation of husband.
Locke.

2. The male of animals.

Ev'n though a snowy ram thou shalt behold,
Prefer him not in battle, for husband to thy fold. Dryden.

3. An economist; a man that knows and practises the methods of frugality and profit. Its signification is always modified by some epithet implying bad or good.

Edward I. shewed himself a right good husband;
owner of a lordship till husbanded. Darvies.

I was considering the shortness of life, and what ill husbands we are of so tender a fortune. Collier on Fame.

4. A tiller of the ground; a farmer.

Husband's work is laborious and hard.

I heard a great husband say, that it was a common error to think that chalk helpeth arable grounds. Bacon.

In those fields
The painful husband plowing up his ground,
Shall find all set with rust, both pikes and shields. Haterwill.

If continu'd rain
The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,
Let him forecast his work. Dryden.

- To HUSBAND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with a husband.

Think you I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd and so husbanded? Shakspeare.

If you shall prove
This ring was ever her's, you shall as easily Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. Shakspeare.

In my right,
By me invested, he compeers the best.
—That were the most, if he should husband you. Shakspeare.

2. To manage with frugality.

It will be patime passing excellent,
If it be husbanded with modesty. Shakspeare.

The French, wisely husbanding the possession of a victory, kept themselves within their trenches. Bacon's Henry VII.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou canst speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech. Herbert.

3. To till; to cultivate the ground with proper management.

A farmer cannot husband his ground, if he fits at a great rent. Bacon.

HUSBANDLESS. adj. [from husband.]
Without a husband.

A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally born to fears. Shakspeare.

HUSBANDLY. adj. [from husband.] Frugal; thrifty.

Bare plots full of galls, if ye plow overthwart;
And compais it then, is a husbandly part. Tusser.

HUSBANDMAN. n. f. [husband and man.]
One who works in tillage.

This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your servingman, and your husbandman. Shakspeare.

The mule being more swift in his labour than the ox, more ground was allowed to the mule by the husbandman. Broomer.

HUSBANDRY. n. f. [from husband.]

1. Tillage; manner of cultivating land.

He began with a wild method to run over all the art of husbandry, especially employing his tongue about well dunging of a field. Sidney.

Ask'd if in husbandry he ought did know,
To plough, to plant, to reap, to sow. Hubb. Ta.

Husbandry supplieth all things necessary for food. Spenser.

Peace hath from France too long been chas'd;
And all her husbandry cloth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility. Shakspeare.

Her plenteous womb
Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry. Shakspeare.

The seeds of virtue may, by the husbandry of christian counsel, produce better fruit than the strength of self-nature. Raleigh.

Husbandry the Spaniards wanting in the valleys of Mexico, could not make our wheat bear seed. Raleigh.

A family governed with order will fall naturally to the several trades of husbandry, tillage, and pasturage. Temple.

Let any one consider the difference between an acre of land sown with wheat, and an acre of the same land lying without any husbandry upon it, and he will find that the improvement of labour makes the value. Locke.

2. Thrift; frugality; parsimony.

There's husbandry in heaven;
The candles are all out. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

You have already taxed several millions to the publick, and that what we ask is too inconsiderable to break into any rules of the strictest good husbandry. Swift.

3. Care of domestick affairs.

Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house. Shakspeare.

HUSH. interj. [without etymology.]

Silence! be still! no noise!

The king hath done you wrong; but hush!
'tis so. Shakspeare.

There's something else to do; hush and be mute, Shakspeare.

Or else our spell is man'd. Shakspeare.

HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.]

Still; silent; quiet.

As we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heavens, the rack stands still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

To HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.]

To be still; to be silent.

This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame
did blush;
Another seem'd envious or coy;
Another in her teeth did know a ruff;
But at these strangers' presence every one did hush. Spenser.

To HUSH. v. a. To still; to silence;

to quiet; to appease.

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be hush; and nought at all to say. Shakspeare.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up;
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blustering land. Shakspeare.

Speak softly;
All's hush as midnight yet. Shakspeare.

My love would speak; my duty hushes me. Shakspeare.

When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads,
Wilt thou then talk thus to me? Wilt thou then Hush my cares thus, and shelter me with love? Orway.

Hush'd as midnight silence go;
He will not have your acclamations now. Dryden.

Her fire at length is kind,
Calms ev'ry storm, and hushes ev'ry wind;
Prepares his empire for his daughter's race,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.

The court was hush'd, and a whisper ran. Aldisford.

To HUSH up. v. a. To suppress in silence; to forbid to be mentioned.

This matter is hush'd up, and the servants are forbid to talk of it. Pope.

HUSHMONEY. n. f. [hush and money.]
A bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.

A deat'rous steward, when his tricks are found,
Hushmoney sends to all the neighbours round;
His master, unsuspecting of his pranks,
Pays all the cost, and gives the villain thanks. Swift.

HUSK. n. f. [buldscb, Dutch, or buys-scken, from buys.] The outmost in-tegment of fruits.

Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men. Shakspeare.

Most seeds, in their growing, leave their husk or rind about the root. Bacon's Natural History.

Thy food shall be
The fresh brook muskel, withered roots, and husks. Shakspeare.

Wherein the acorn cradled.
Fruits of all kinds, in coat
Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husk, or shell,
She gathers; tribute large! and on the board
Heaps with unsparing hand. Milton.

Some steep their seeds, and some in cauldrons boil
O'er gentle fires; the exuberant juice to drain,
And swell the flatt'ring husks with fruitful grain. Dryden.

Some when the press
Has drain'd the pulposus mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse; thou, more wise, shalt steep
The husks in water, and again employ
The pond'rous engine. Philips.

Barley for ptisan was first steeped in water till it swelled; afterwards dried in the sun, then beat till the husk was taken off, and ground. DeBart.

Do not content yourselves with mere words,
lest you feed upon husks instead of kernels. Watts.

To HUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip off the outward integument.

HUSKED. adj. [from husk.] Bearing a husk; covered with a husk.

HUSKY. adj. [from husk.] Abounding in husks; consisting of husks.

Most have found
A husky harvest from the grudging ground. Dryden.

With timely care
Shave the goat's shaggy beard, lest thou too late
In vain should'st seek a strainer, to dispart
The husky terrene dregs from purer mud. Philips.

HU'SSY. n. f. [corrupted from housewife: taken in an ill sense.] A sorry or bad woman; a worthless wench. It is often used ludicrously in slight disapprobation.

Get you in, hussy, go: now will I personate this hopeful young jade. Southern.

To HU'STLE. v. a. [perhaps corrupted from hurtle.] To shake together in confusion.

HU'SWIFE. n. f. [corrupted from housewife.]

1. A bad manager; a sorry woman. It is common to use housewife in a good, and huswife or hussy in a bad sense.

Bianca.
A huswife, that, by felling her desires,
Buys herself bread and cloth. Shakespeare.

2. An economist; a thrifty woman.

Why should you want?
The bounteous huswife, nature, on each bush Lays her fulness before you. Shakespeare.

To HU'SWIFE. v. a. [from the noun.] To manage with economy and frugality.

But huswifing the little heav'n had lent,
She duly paid a groat for quarter-rent;
And pinch'd her belly, with her daughters two,
To bring the year about with much ado. Dryden.

HU'SWIFERY. n. f. [from huswife.]

1. Management good or bad.

Good huswifery trieth
To rise with the cock;
Ill huswifery lyeth
Till nine of the clock. Tassie.

Tell Cissy the fault in her huswifery lies. Infer.

HUT. n. f. [hurte, Saxon; hute, Fr.] A poor cottage.

Our wand'ring foints, in woful state,
To a small cottage came at last,
Where dwelt a good old honest yeoman,
Who kindly did these foints invite
In his poor hut to pass the night. Swift.

Sore pite'd by wintry wind,
How many ibrink into the for'd'd hut
Of cheerless poverty! Thomson.

HUTCH. n. f. [hyæca, Saxon; buche, French.] A corn chest.

The best way to keep them, after they are rattled, is to dry them well, and keep them in Antioch, or cloth sacks. Mortimer.

To HUIZZ. v. n. [from the sound.] To buzz; to murmur.

HUZZA! interj. A shout; a cry of acclamation.

The huzzas of the rabble are the same to a bear that they are to a prince. L'Estrange.
You keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night; huzzas and hunting-horns never let me cool. Arbutnot.

All fame is foreign, but of true desert
Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart:
One self-approving hour whole years outweighs
Of stupid flatters and of loud huzzas. Pope.

To HUIZZA! v. n. [from the interjection.] To utter acclamation.

A caldron of fat beef, and Shop of ale,
On the huzzing mob shall still prevail. King.

To HUIZZA! v. n. To receive or attend with acclamation.

He was huzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers. Addison.

HYACINTH. n. f. [hyacinthos; hyacinthe, French; hyacinthus, Latin.]

1. A flower.

It hath a bulbous root: the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked, the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed: the ovary becomes a roundish fruit with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds. Milner.

The fiken fleece, impurpl'd for the loom,
Rival'd the hyacinth in vernal bloom. Pope.

2. A gem.

The hyacinth is the same with the lapis hyacinthus of the ancients. It is a less showy gem than any of the other red ones. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg. It is found of various degrees of deepness and paleness; but its colour is always a deadish red, with a considerable admixture of yellow; its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame-colour. Hill.

HYACINTHINE. adj. [hyacinthos; hyacinthinus, Lat.] Made of hyacinth; resembling hyacinths.

HYADES. n. f. [hyades; hyades, Lat.] A constellation.

Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name

For ev'ry ha'd and ev'ry wand'ring star;
The pleiads, hyads. Dryden's Geo. geik.

HYALINE. adj. [hyalos; hyalinus, Lat.] Glassy; crystalline; made glass; resembling glass.

From heav'n-gate not far, founded in view
On the clear hyaline, the glassy sea. Milner.

HYBRIDOUS. adj. [hybris; hybrida, Lat.] Begotten between animals of different species.

Why such different species should not only ming'le together, but also generate an animal, and yet that hybridous production should not again generate, is to me a mystery. Ray.

HYDATIDES. n. f. [from hyda.] Little transparent bladders of water in any part: most common in dropical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lymphducts. Quincy.

All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides. Wise.

HYDRA. n. f. [hydra, Latin.] A monster with many heads slain by Hercules: whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.

New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false north displays
Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.

More formidable hydra stands within,
Whole jaws with iron-teeth severely grin. Dryd.

The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew. Dryden.

HYDRAGOGUES. n. f. [hydra; agoge, Greek; hydragogue, French.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger catharticks, because they shake moist forcibly the bowels and their appendages. Quincy.

HYDRAULICAL. adj. [from hydrau.] Relating to the conveyance of water through pipes.

Among the engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted, and other hydraulic engines. Derham.

We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulic engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastic channels. Arbutnot and Pope.

HYDROMEL. n. f. [hydra; and μελις; hydromel, French.] Honey and water.

Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern part of Europe affords, as well as one of the most ancient. Mortimer.

In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were pilsans and cream of barley: hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium. Arbutnot.

HYDROMETER. n. f. [hydra; and μετρος.] An instrument to measure the extent or profundity of water.

HYDROMETRY. n. f. [hydra; and μετρος.] The act of measuring the extent of water.

HYDROPHOBIA. n. f. [hydropneumia; hydrophobie, French.] Dread of water.

Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the hydrophobia, or dread of water, is the most remarkable. Quincy.

HYDRO'PICAL. adj. [hydropneumia; hydro.] HYDRO'PICK. adj. [hydropneumia; hydro.] pique, French; from hydrops, Latin.]

1. Dropical; diseased with extravasated water.

Cantharides heat the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydro water. Bacon.

The world's whole say is sunk:
The general balm th' hydro canth hath drunk. Doane.

Hydro swellings, if they be pure, are pellucid. Wise.

Hydropic wretches by degrees decay,
Growing the more, the more they wait away;
By their own ruins they augmented live,
With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry. Blackmore.

One sort of remedy, he uses in dropics, the water of the hydro. Arbutnot.

2. Resembling dropfy.

Some men's hydro insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

Every lust is a kind of hydro distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson.

HYDROSTATICAL. adj. [hydra; and στασις.] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.

A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be reconcilable to this hydro law: there will be always something lighter beneath.

HYM

and something heavier above; because bone, the heaviest in species, will be ever in the midst.

Bentley.

HYDROSTA'TICALLY. adv. [from hydro- statical.] According to hydrostatics.

The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of them matter; for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass.

Bentley.

HYDROSTA'TICKS. n. f. [ὕδωρ and στατική; hydrostatique, French.] The science of weighing fluids, or weighing bodies in fluids.

HYDROTICK. n. f. [ὕδωρ; hydrotique, French.] Purger of water or phlegm.

He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydroticks and purgers of bile.

Arbutnot on Coins.

HYE'N. } n. f. [hyene, Fr. hyena, Lat.]

HYE'NA. } An animal like a wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.

I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, when you are inclined to sleep.

Shakespeare.

A wonder more amazing would we find; Th' hyena shows it, of a double kind; Varying the tenses in alternate years, In one begets, and in another bears.

Dryden.

The hyena was indeed well joined with the heaver, as having also a bag in those parts, by thereby we understand the hyena adriata, or civet cat.

Reveron's Vulgar Errors.

The keen hyena, fellest of the fell, Thompson.

HYGRO'METER. n. f. [ὕγρος and μετρεῖν; hygrometre, Fr.] An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.

A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river.

Arbutnot.

HY'GROSCOPE. n. f. [ὕγρος and σκοπεῖν; hygroscope, Fr.] An instrument to shew the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme.

1. The god of marriage.

2. The virginal membrane.

HYMENE'AL. } n. f. [ὕμηνος.] A marriage song.

And heavenly choirs the hymenean sing. Milt.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;

For her white virgins hymeneals sing. Pope.

HYMENE'AL. } adj. Pertaining to marriage.

The suitors heard, and dem'd the mirthful voice.

A signal of her hymeneal choice. Pope's Odyssey.

HYMN. n. f. [ὕμνος, Fr. hymne.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superior being.

As I earth, in praise of mine own dame,

To now in honour of thy mother dear,

An honourable hymn I like should frame. Spens.

Our solemn hymns to fallen dignities change;

Our bridal flow'rs serve for a buried coarſe. Shak.

When steel grows

Soft as the paradise's silk, let hymns be made

An orature for the wars. Shakspeare's Cor.

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah, and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour.

Bacon.

Facewell, you happy shades,
Where angels first should practise hymns, and firing
Their tuneful harps, when they to Heav'n would sing.

Dryden.

To HYMN. v. a. [ὕμνῳ.] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.

Whose business were to serve the Lord
High up in heav'n, with songs to hymn his throne.

Milton.

To HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning praised.

God and his works. Milton.

He had not left alive this patient saint,
This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence,
To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
And hymn it in the quire. Dryd. Spanish Friar.

HY'MNICK. adj. [ὕμνος.] Relating to hymus.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes.

In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

To HYP. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been, to the last degree, hyped since I saw you.

Spectator.

HY'PALLAGE. n. f. [ὕπαλλαξις.] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.

HY'PER. n. f. [A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,
And hyper upon them again. Prior.

HYPERBOLA. n. f. [ὑπερβολή, Fr. hyperbole, Fr. hyperbole, Lat.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolic section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex.

Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentric.

Bentley.

HYPERBOLE. n. f. [ὑπερβολή, Fr. hyperbole, Fr. hyperbole, Lat.] A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: He runs faster than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him. Shakspeare.

Terms unlikeliest
Which, from the torus of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperbole.

Shakspeare.

Tallata phrases, taken terms precise,
Three pill'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, their summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.

Shakspeare.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its adored objects. Glauco.

HY P

HY P

Hyperboles, so daring and so bold, Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd; Above the clouds, but yet within our sight, They mount with truth, and make a towering flight.

Gravelle.

The common people understand railery, or at least rhetoric, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense.

Swift.

HYPERBO'LLICAL. } adj. [hyperbolique, Fr. HYPERBO'LLICK. } from hyperbola, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancelled in the middle with squares, with triangles before and behind with hyperbolic lines.

Newton's Method.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye sits up, as a hillcock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolic or parabolical figure.

Key on the Exposition.

2. [from hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolic, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense.

Boyle.

HYPERBO'LLICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]

1. In form of an hyperbola.

2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically.

Brown.

Scylla is wated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible.

Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

HYPERBO'LLIFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBO'REAN. n. f. [hyperborien, Fr. hyperboreus, Lat.] Northern.

HYPERCRIT'ICK. n. f. [hypercritique, Fr. ὑπερκριτικὴ, Lat.] A critick exact or captious beyond use or reason.

Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages.

Dryden.

HYPERCRIT'ICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use.

We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical punishments, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to.

Evelyn.

Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner.

Swift.

HYPERMETER. n. f. [ὑπερμετρία, Fr. hypermetre, Lat.] Any thing greater than the standard requires.

When a man rises beyond six foot, he is a hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club.

Addison.

HYPERMARGO'SIS. n. f. [ὑπερμαργώσις, Fr. hypermargosis, Lat.] The growth of fungous or proud flesh.

Where the hypermargosis was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction.

Hoffman.

hypochondria; from whence such persons are called hypochondriack. Debutant on Aliments.
HYPOCHONDRICAL. } adj. [hypochondria- HYPOCHONDRICK. } que, Fr. from hypochondres.]

1. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Dreary of Piety

2. Producing melancholy; having the nature of melancholy.

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected; as in great fears, and hypochondriacal passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon's Natural History.

HYPOCRIST. n. f. [ὕψιστος; hypocrite, Fr.]

An inspissated juice considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. The stem of the plant is thick and fleshy; and much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, gathered before they are ripe: the juice is expressed, then formed into cakes. Hill.

HYPOCRISY. n. f. [hypocrisis, Fr. ὕψιστος.] Dissimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Next flood hypocrisy with holy leer,
 Soft smiling and demurely looking down;
 But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryd.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint: men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.

HYPOCRITE. n. f. [hypocrite, French; ὕψιστος.]

1. A dissembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays: some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shakspeare.

A wife man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Ecclesi.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain;
 Your silence argues, you ask time to reign. Dryd.

The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.

2. A dissembler.

Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass
 Suffices virtue: Lur may hypocrites,
 Who slyly speak one thing, another think,
 Material as hell, still pleas'd unwear'd drunk on,

And through intemperance grow a while sincere. Philip.

HYPOCRITICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.]
HYPOCRITICK. } Dissembling; insincere; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be precluded a libertine. Rogers.

Let others skew their hypocritical face. Swift.

HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.

Simeon and Levi spoke not only falsely, but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing at once their profecy and their religion. Government of the Tongue.

HYPOGASTRICK. adj. [hypogastrique, Fr. ὕψος and γαστήρ.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Wifeman

HYPOGEUM. n. f. [ὑπόγειον and γῆ.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.

HYPOSTASIS. n. f. [hypostasis, Fr. ὕψιστος.]

1. Distinct substance.

2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those comprised in the ancient simple article. Hammond.

HYPOSTATICAL. adj. [hypostatique, Fr. from hypostasis.]

1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.

Let our Carneades, warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostatical principles, till they have a little examined it. Boyle.

2. Personal; distinctly personal.

HYPOTENUSE. n. f. [hypotenuse, French; ὑποτενύση.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle; the subtense.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

HYPOTHESIS. n. f. [hypothese, Fr. ὑπόθεσις.] A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved.

The mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole unintelligible. Scotch.

With imagin'd sovereignty

Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns;
 He reigns: how long? till some usurper rise;
 And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wife,
 Studies new lines, and other circles reigns. Prior.

HYPOTHEtical. } adj. [hypothetique, Fr.

HYPOTHEtical. } from hypothesis.] Including a supposition; conditional.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Watts.

HYPOTHEtically. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypothetically. Brown.

HYRST, HURST, HERST, are all from the Saxon hýrst, a wood or grove. Gibson.

HYSSOP. n. f. [hyssop, Fr. hyssopus, Lat.] A verticillate plant.

It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in scripture. Miller.

The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop; for that is not the leaf of vegetables observed to grow upon walls; but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.

HYSTERICAL. } adj. [hysterique, French;
HYSTERICK. } ὕστερος.]

1. Troubled with fits; disordered in the regions of the womb.

In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike an astonishment into spectators. Harvey on Consumptions.

Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Floyer on the Humours.

2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.

Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
 Who gave th' hysterick or poetic fit. Pope.

This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbuthnot.

HYSTERICKS. n. f. [ὕστερος.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

I.

I Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked with an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin. Preceded to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken freend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as sail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word is always expressed by y.

J consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant, as jade, jet, jilt, jolt, just.

1. pronoun personal. [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.]

I, gen. me; plural we, gen. us, ic, me; pe, ur.]

1. The pronoun of the first person, myself.

I do not like these several councils, I. Shaksp.
There is none greater in this house than I. Gen.
Be of good cheer, it is I: be not afraid. Mat.

What shall I do to be for ever known,
And make thy age to come my own;
I shall like beasts to common people dye,
Unless you write my elegy. Cowley.

Hence, and make room for me. Cowley.
When chance of business parts us two,
What do our souls, I wonder do? Cowley.

Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,
I to my longing friends return again. Dryden.

Of night impatient we demand the day,
The day arrives, and for the night we pray. Blackmore.

2. Me is in the following passage written for I.

There is but one man whom she can have,
and that is me. Clarissa.

3. I is more than once in Shakspere written for ay, or yes.

Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shak.

Did your letters pierce the queen?
—I, sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shakspere.

- To JABBER. a. n. [gabberen, Dutch.]

To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties. Swift.

- JA'BBERER*. n. f. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.

Out came the Babylonian labourers
At all their dialects of jabberers. Hudibras.

- JA'CENT*. adj. [jacens, Lat.] Lying at length.

So laid, they are more apt in swagging down to pierce than in the ja-cent posture. Watson.

- JA'CINTH*. n. f. [for hyacinth, Jerusalem for Hierusalem.]

1. The same with hyacinth.

2. A gem of a deep reddish yellow, approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber. Woodward.

- JACK*. n. f. [probably by mistake from Jaques, which in French is James.]

1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for saucy or paltry fellows.

I am in estimation:
You will perceive that a Jack gardant cannot Office me from my son Coriolanus. Shakspere.

I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise. Shakspere.

Every Jack slave has his belly-full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match. Shakspere.

2. The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy: as, an instrument to pull off boots.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts' Logick.

3. An engine which turns the spit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm. Maxon.

The ordinary jacks, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels. Witkin.
A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wifeman.

Some strain in rhyme; the muses on their racks Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks. Pope.

4. A young pike.

No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer.

5. [jacque, Fr.] A coat of mail.

The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

6. A cup of waxed leather.

Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple cup. Dryden.

7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain howling-green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byass, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack. Bentley.

8. A part of the musical instrument called a virginal.

In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Bacon.

9. The male of animals.

A jack ass, for a halibon, was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty-nine pounds three shillings and four-pence. Arbutnot

10. A support to saw wood on. Ainsw.

11. The colours or ensign of a ship. Ainsw.

12. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing, as in the following phrase.

Jack of all trades, shew and sound;
An inverse buffe, an exchange under ground. Cleaveland.

- JACK Boots*. n. f. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which serve as armour to the legs.

A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a comode and a night-rail. Spitator.

- JACK by the hedge*. n. f. [erysimum.] An herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other fallads are, and much used in broth. Mortimer.

- JACK Pudding*. n. f. [jack and pudding.] A zany; a merry Andrew.

Every jack pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover. L'Estr.
A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dish they like best: in French jean potage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.

Jack pudding, in his party-coloured jacket,
Tosses the glove, and jolts at every pocket. Gay.

- JACK with a Lantern*. An ignis fatuus.

- JACKAL*. n. f. [chacal, Fr.] A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chafe-guus through our flerns they send: Shakspere.

Close by their fireships, like accas appear,
Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryden.
The mighty lion, before whom flood the little jackals, the faithful spy of the king of beasts. Arbutnot and Pope.

- JACKALENT*. n. f. [Jack in Lent, a poor starved fellow.] A simple sheepish fellow.

You little jackalent, have you been true to us?

—Ay, I'll be sworn. Shakspere.

- JA'KANAPES*. n. f. [jack and ape.]

1. Monkey; an ape.

2. A coxcomb; an impertinent.

Which is he?

That jackanapes with scuffs. Shakspere.
People wonder'd how such a young upstart jackanapes should grow so pert and saucy, and take so much upon him. Arbutnot.

- JACKDA'W*. n. f. [jack and daw.] A cock daw; a bird taught to imitate the human voice.

To impose on a child to get by heart a long scroll of phrases, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the shape of man. Watts.

- JA'CKET*. n. f. [jacquet, Fr.]

1. A short coat; a close waistcoat.

In a blue jaquet, with a cross of red. Habb. T.
And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;
And here a tailor's jaquet hangs to dry. Pope.

2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.

She fell upon the jaquet of the parson, who stood gaping at her. L'Estrange.

- JA'COB's Ladder*. n. f. [polemonium.] The same with Greek valerian.

- JA'COB's Staff*. n. f.

1. A pilgrim's staff.

2. Staff concealing a dagger.

3. A cross-staff; a kind of astrolabe.

- JA'COBINE*. n. f. A pigeon with a high tuft. Ainsworth.

- JACTITA'TION*. n. f. [jactilo, Lat.]

1. Tossing motion; restlessness; heaving.

If the patient be surprised with jactitation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Harvey.

2. A term in the canon law for a false pretension to marriage.

- JACULATION*. n. f. [jaculatio, jaculor, Lat.] The act of throwing missile weapons.

So hills amid' the air, encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.

- JADE*. n. f. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad or spur.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag.

Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!

I am as dull as winter-starved sheep,
Tid'd as a jade in overladen cart. Sidney.

When they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades, Sink in the trial. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-lances in their hand; and their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shakspere.

So have I seen with armed heel,
A wight bestride a commonweal,
While still the more he kick'd and spur'd'd,
The less the fallen jade has stir'd. Hudibras.

The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him. L'Estrange.

False steps but help them to renew their race.
As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.

2. A forry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.

Shall these, these old jades, pass the flower
Of youth, that you have, pass you. Chapman.
But the, the cunning'st jade alive,
Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive. Stepney.
Get in, huffy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southern.
In diamonds, pearls, and rich brocades,
She shines the first of batter'd jades,
And flutters in her pride. Suiff.

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.

You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Addison.

- JADE. n. f. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale bluish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres. Hill.

- To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary: applied originally to horses.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We've jaded out o' th' field. Shakespeare.
It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast
No favour for the stallion we retain,
And no respect for the degenerate strain. Dryden.
The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Lacke.

There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; and upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation.
Watts.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood
Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shakspeare.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this. Shakspeare.

- To JADE. v. a. To lose spirit; to sink.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South.

- JADISH. adj. [from jade.]

1. Vitious; bad, as a horse.

That hors'd us on their backs, to show us
A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hutchins.
When once the people get the jadish trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe.
Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.

'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest.
L'Estrange.

- To JAGG. v. a. [gagaw, splits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon.

The jagging of pinks and gillflowers is like the inequality of oak leaves; but they never have any small plain parts. Bacon.

The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent under-minings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentley.

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts.

- JAGG. n. f. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jaggs or scallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jaggs in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Mortimer's Husbandry.

- JAGGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.

His tower's crest was glorious to behold;
His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold:
Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;

His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows
Addison.

Amid' those angles, infinitely strain'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy tails behind.
Thomson.

- JAGGEDNESS. n. f. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain, before you give them their veins or jag-gedness. Peachum on Drawing.

- JAIL. n. f. [geol, Fr.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him.
Shakspeare.

A dependant upon him paid six thousand pounds ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew

'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.
One jail did all their criminals restrain,
Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain.
Dryden.

- JAILBIRD. n. f. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

- JAILER. n. f. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.

Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunn'd it, seeing and disdain'd his mind, as because of her jealous jailers. Sidney.

This is as a jailer, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakspeare.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;
With hoarse commands his breathing subjects
call,

And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryd.

Palamon, the prisoner knight,
Restless for woe, arose before the light;
And, with his jailer's leave, desired to breathe
An air more welcome than the damp beneath
Dryden.

- JAKES. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.] A house of office.

I will tread this inhospitable villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakspeare.
Their stink'd advance takes

In excrements, and hides the very jakes. Dryden.
Some have fish'd the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

- JALAP. n. f. [jalap, French; jalapium, low Latin.] A medicinal drug.

Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acid and nauseous taste. It had its name Jala- pium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Maderas. It is an excellent purgative where ferous humours are to be evacuated. Hill.

- JAM. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

- JAMB. n. f. [jambe, French, a leg.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the forehead of the chimney jamb. Mason.

- JAMBICK. n. f. [jambique, French; jambicus, Latin.] Verses composed of iam-bick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy high pen, and sits:
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen jambicks, but mild anagram. Lyden.

- To JANGLE. v. a. [jangler, French. Skinner.] To alternate; to quarrel; to bicker in words. A low word.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles agree,
This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his look-men. Shakspeare.

So far am I glad it did so fort,
And this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakspeare.

There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world
matter of contention and jangling. Railign.

- To JANGLE. v. a. To make to sound untunably.

Now see that noble and that sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh.

'Ere Gothick forms were known in Greece,
And in our verse 'ere monkish times

Had jangled their fantastick chimæres. Præ.

- JANGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

- JANIZARY. n. f. [a Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand vizier, presuming to invest
The chief imperial city of the west,
With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;
The standards lost, and janizaries slain,
Render the hopes he gave his master vain.
Waller.

- JANNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oat-bread. A northern word.

- JASTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, Fr.] Showy; fluttering.

This sort of woman is jasty flatter: she hangs on her clutches, plays her head, and varies her posture. SpeBart.

- JANUARY. n. f. [Januarius, Latin.] The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying Providence. Peachum.

- JAPAN. n. f. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours. It is commonly used with another substantive, and therefore may be considered as an adjective.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Swift.

- To JAPAN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

For not the deck with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well-japan'd avails

The writing of good sense.

Swift.

4. To black and gloss shoes. A low phrase.

The god of fire

Among these gen'rous presents joins his part,
And aids with foot the new japanning art.

Gay.

JAPANNER. n. f. [from japan.]

1. One skilled in japan work.

2. A shoeblacker. So called because he makes the shoes shine.

The poor have the same itch;

They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their shoes.

Pope.

To JAR. v. n. [from eo jarre, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonic, to clamour.]

1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung.

Dryd.

My knees tremble with the jarring blow.

Gay.

2. To strike or sound untunably and irregularly.

O, you kind gods!

Cure this great breach in his abused nature:
Th' untun'd and jarring tenets, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father!

Shakspeare.

I perceive you delight not in music.
—Not a whit, when it jars so.

Shakspeare.

A string may jar in the best master's hand,
And the most skilful archer miss his aim.

Rafcom.

He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
And every passion aptly harmoniz'd

Amid a jarring world.

Thomson's Summer.

3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree.

Shakspeare.

For orders and degrees

Jar not with liberty, but well consist.

Milton.

Venulus concluded his report:

A jarring murmur fill'd the fashious court:
As when a torrent rolls with rapid race,
The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
Roars hurribile.

Dryden's Æneid.

4. To quarrel; to dispute.

When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,

Spenser.

Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then Ophesus with his nap the strife did har.

Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducting to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other.

Dryden

JAR. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.

In r, the tongue is held flabby at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar.

Holder.

2. Clash of interests or opinions; discord; debate.

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar:

Spenser.

O miserable men, that to him subject are!

Fairy Queen

Nathless, my brother, since we parted are Unto this point, we will appease our jar.

Hubbard's Tale.

Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,

Between whole endles jar justice presides,

Would lose their names, and so would justice too.

Shakspeare.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or that ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time.

Swift.

4. [giarro, Italian.] An earthen vessel.

About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles.

Boyle.

He mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars.

Dryden.

Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound.

Garth.

JARDES. n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside.

This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches.

Farrier's Dict.

JA'RGON. n. f. [jargon, Fr. gericongo, Spanish.] Unintelligible talk; gabble;
gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration; yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain reason or jargon.

Bramhall.

From this last sort again what knowledge flows?
Just as much, perhaps, as flows
That all his predecessor's rules
Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools.

Prior.

During the usurpation an infusion of enthusi-astick jargon prevailed in every writing.

Swift.

JA'RGONELLE. n. f. A species of pear.

See PEAR.

JA'SHAWK. n. f. [probably ias or eyas
hawk.] A young hawk.

Linseworth.

JA'SMINE. n. f. [gelsimum; jessmin, Fr.]
It is often pronounced jessamine. A creeping shrub with a fragrant flower.

Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;

From jessmine grove to grove may'st wander.

Thomson.

JA'SMINE Persian. n. f. A plant. A species of lilach.

JA'SPER. n. f. [jasp, French; jaspis, Lat.]
A hard stone of a bright beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes.
It is capable of a very elegant polish,
and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China.

Hill.

The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue,
and spotted with red, yellow, and white.

Woodward's Met. Ess.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the vatican library.

Addison on Italy.

IATROPTICK. adj. [iatroptique, Fr.
iatrik and optika.] That cures by anointing.

To JA'VEL, or jable. v. a. To be mire; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary travelling and travelling. This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties.

JA'VEL. n. f. [perhaps from the verb.]
A wandering or dirty fellow.

When as time, flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that those two javels
Should tender up a reckoning of their travels.

Hubbard's Tale.

Sir Thomas More, preparing himself for execution, put on his best apparel, which the executenant compelled him to put off again, saying,

That he who should have them was but a javel.
What, says Sir Thomas, shall I account him a javel, who shall this day do me so great a benefit?

More's Life of Sir Thomas More.

JA'VELIN. n. f. [javeline, French.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and javelin, stones and sulph'rous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

She shakes her myrtle javelin, and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind.

Dryden.

Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm.

Addison.

JAUNDICE. n. f. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, French.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straiten the motion of the blood so much through that viscous, as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastrick arteries, which go off from the hepatick; to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom.

Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm
within,
Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster?

Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish?

Shakspeare. Merch. of Venice.

Those were thy thoughts, and thou could'st
judge aright,

Till int'rest made a jaundice in thy sight.

Dryden.

The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tinctured with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the appearances of things.

Harris.

JAUNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that the infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye.

Pope.

To JAUNT. v. n. [janter, French.] To wander here and there; to bustle about.
It is now always used in contempt or levity.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass;
Spur-gal'd and tir'd by jaunting bolingbroke.

Shakspeare's Richard II.

JAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Rantle; flight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd fore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest.

Milton.

He sends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houses in the night to haunt.

Hubbard.

They parted, and away jolts the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court.

L'Estrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it briskest.

Dryden's Spenser.

Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part have I run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out these metallick and mineral bodies.

Woodward.

JAUNTINESS. n. f. [from jaunty, or jaunty, corrupted from gentil, French. See JANTY.] Airiness; flutter; genteel-
ness.

A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that jauntyness of air I was once master of.

Addison's Spectator.

ICH

JAW. n. f. [joue, a cheek, French; whence jawbone, or cheekbone, then jaw.]
1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor.

Proverbs.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinale.

Walton's Angler.

Piso, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, said that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immovable.

Grew's Museum.

More formidable hydra stands within,
Whole *jaw*s with iron teeth severely grim.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my *jaw*s, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death.

Psalms.

My banded hook shall pierce their slimy *jaw*s.

Shakespeare.

A sneaky foam works o'er my grinding *jaw*s,
And utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame.

Rowe.

JAY. n. f. [named from his cry. Skinner.]
A bird; piaglandaria.

Two sharp winged sheers,

Deck'd with diverse plumes, like painted jays,
Were fixed at his back, to cut his any ways.

Fairy Queen.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross wat'ry pumpkin—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

Shakespeare.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark,
Because his feathers are more beautiful?

Shaksf.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks.

Spectator.

Admires the jay, the insects gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk, when philomela sings.

Pope.

JAZEL. n. f. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour.

Diſt.

ICE. n. f. [is, Saxon; eyse, Dutch.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold.

You are no surer, no,

Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes.

Shaksf.

If I should ask whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative.

Locke.

2. Concreted sugar.

3. To break the ice. To make the first opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat,
Achieve the elder, let the younger free

For our acc'ts, whose hap shall be to have her,
Will not to graceless he to be ingrate.

Shaksf.

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets.

Poacham.

After he'd a while look'd wife,
At last broke silence and the ice.

Hudibras.

To ICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice.

2. To cover with concreted sugar.

ICEHOUSE. n. f. [ice and house] A house in which ice is deposited against the warm months.

ICHNEUMON. n. f. [ichneumon.] A small animal that breaks the eggs of the crocodile.

ICHNEUMONFLY. n. f. A sort of fly.

The generation of the ichneumonfly is in the bodies of caterpillars, and other nymphæ of insects.

Dorham's Physico-Theol.

ICHOGRAPHY. n. f. [ichthos and graphos.] The groundplot.

It will be more intelligible to have a draught of each front in a paper by itself, and also to have a draught of the groundplot or ichnography of every story in a paper by itself.

Maxon.

ICY

ICHOR. n. f. [ichor.] A thin watery humour like serum.

Quincy.

Milk, drawn from some animals that feed only upon flesh, will be more apt to turn rancid and putrify, acquiring first a saline taste, which is a sign of putrefaction, and then it will turn into an ichor.

Debushest on Elements.

ICHOROUS. adj. [from ichor.] Serous; fanious; thin; undigested.

The lung-growth is imputed to a superficial fanious or ichorous exulceration.

Hartley.

The pus from an ulcer of the liver, growing thin and ichorous, corrodes the vessels.

Arbuth.

ICHTHYOLOGY. n. f. [ichthyologie, French; ichthologia, from ichthos and logos.] The doctrine of the nature of fishes.

Some there are, as camels and sheep, which carry no name in ichthyology.

Brown.

ICHTHYOPHAGY. n. f. [ichthos and phagos.] Diet of fish; the practice of eating fish.

ICEBERG. n. f. [from ice.] A shoot of ice commonly hanging down from the upper part.

If distilled vinegar or aqua-fortis be poured into the powder of loadstone, the subliming powder, dried, retains some magneſtical virtue; but if the menstruum be evaporated to a consistence, and afterwards doth shoot into icebergs, or crystals, the loadstone hath no power upon them.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

From locks uncomb'd, and from the frozen beard,

Long icebergs depend, and cracking sounds are heard.

Dryden.

The common droptone consists principally of spar, and is frequently found in form of an iceberg, hanging down from the tops and sides of grottos.

Woodward's Natural History.

Flyer.

2. Good against the jaundice.

ICY. adj. [from ice.]

1. Full of ice; covered with ice; made of ice; cold; frosty.

But my poor heart first set free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.

Shakespeare.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as, the icy pang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind.

Shakespeare.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter.

Keyle.

Bear Britain's thunder, and her cross display
To the bright regions of the rising day;
Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll,
Where clearer flames glow round the frozen pole.

Pope.

2. Cold; free from passion.

Thou would'st have never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect.

Shakespeare.

3. Frigid; backward.

IDE

If thou do'st find him tractable to us,

IDEA. n. f. [idée, French; idea.] Mental image.

Whatever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea.

Locke.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea.

Watts.

Happy you that may to the faint, your only idea,

Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter.

Sidney.

Our Saviour himself, being to set down the pointed idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with them it is in heaven.

Hooker.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thoughts.

Fairfax.

I did infer your lineaments,
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobleness of mind.

Shaksf.

How good, how fair,
Answering his great idea!

Milton's Par. Lost.

If Chaucer by the best idea wrought,
The fairest nymph before his eyes he set.

Dryden.

IDEAL. adj. [from idea.] Mental; intellectual; not perceived by the senses.

There is a two-fold knowledge of material things; one real, when the thing, and real impression of things on our senses, is perceived; the other ideal, when the image or idea of a thing absent in itself, is represented to and considered on the imagination.

Chrysos.

IDEALLY. adv. [from ideal.] Intellectually; mentally.

A transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one.

Brown.

The beard's th' identick beard you knew,
The same numerically true.

Hudibras.

There majus is identical with magis.

Hale.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith.

Tiltsen's Sermons.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God.

Bentley's Sermons.

IDENTITY. n. f. [identité, French; identitas, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water.

Brown.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty.

Scut's Sermons.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with self-existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity.

Locke.

By cutting off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always rhyme to the next following, is produced too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram.

Prior.

IDES. n. f. [ides, French; idus, Latin.]

A term anciently used among the Romans, and still retained in the Romish calendar. It is the 13th day of each

The apostle is there arguing against the idol-ticks who joined in the idol feasts, and whom he therefore accuses of participating of the idol god. Atterbury.

2. A counterfeit.

Woe to the idle shepherd that leaveth the flock, Zechariah.

3. An image.

Never did art so well with nature strive, Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive; So like the man, so golden to the sight; So base within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.

4. A representation. Not in use.

Men beholding so great excellence, And rare perfection in mortality, Do her adore with sacred reverence, As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence. Fairy Queen.

5. One loved or honoured to adoration.

He's honoured and lov'd by all; The soldier's god, and people's idol. Denham.

IDOLATER. n. f. [idolatre, French; idolatra, Lat.] One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.

The state of idolaters is two ways miserable: first, in that which they worship they find no succour; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion.

J E A

Hooker.

An astrologer may be no christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism.

Bentley's Sermons.

TO IDO'LATRIZE. v. a. [from idolater.]

To worship idols. Ainsworth.

IDO'LATROUS. adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.

Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped. Preachin or Drawing.

IDO'LATROUSLY. adv. [from idolatrous.]

In an idolatrous manner.

Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred. Hooker.

IDO'LATRY. n. f. [idolatrie, French; idololatria, Latin.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.

Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd;

And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be stutted in thy head.

Shakespeare.

Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way unsuitable to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances. South.

The kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addison.

IDO'LIST. n. f. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.

I to God have brought Dis honour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idollists and atheist. Milton.

TO IDO'LIZE. v. a. [from idol.] To love or reverence to adoration.

Those who are generous, humble, just, and wise,
Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize. Denham.

Parties, with the greatest violation of christian unity, denigrate themselves, not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first breacher of their idolized opinions. Decay of Piety.

IDO'NEOUS. adj. [idoneus, Latin.] Fit; proper; convenient; adequate.

You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body. Boyle.

I. E. for id est, or, that is.

That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater surplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour. Locke.

JE'ALOUS. adj. [jealous, French.]

1. Suspicious in love.

To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the thing
Are of the adder. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure;
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abus'd; look to't.

Shakespeare's Othello.

J E E

Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband.

Shakespeare.

A jealous empress lies within your arms,

Too haughty to endure neglected charms. Dryden.

2. Emulous; full of competition.

I could not, without extreme reluctance, resign the theme of your beauty to another hand: give me leave to acquaint the world that I am jealous of this subject. Dryden.

3. Zealously cautious against dishonour.

I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts.

1 Kings.

4. Suspiciously vigilant.

I am jealous over you with godly jealousy.

2 Cor.

His apprehensions, as his jealous nature had much of sagacity in it, or his restless and mutinous humour, transported him. Clarendon.

5. Suspiciously careful.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Baron's Henry vi.

They jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar Protolling fate supreme. Milton.

How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own repute, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other men's? Decay of Piety.

6. Suspiciously fearful.

'Tis doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys your peace.

Waller.

While the people are so jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift.

JE'ALOUSLY. adv. [from jealous.] Suspiciously; emulously; with suspicious fear, vigilance, or caution.

JE'ALOUSNESS. n. f. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous; rivalry; suspicion; suspicious vigilance.

Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousness of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me.

King Charles.

JE'ALOUSY. n. f. [jaalousie, French; from jealous.]

1. Suspicion in love.

But gnawing jealousy, out of their sight
Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite. Fairy Q.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair;
And thudd'ring fear, and green-eyed jealousy!
O love, be moderate; allay thine ecstasy. Shaks.

Why did you suffer jealousy,
Slight thing of Italy,

To taint his noble heart and brain
With needless jealousy? Shaks. Cymbeline.

Small jealousies, 'tis true, inflame desire;
Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire. Dryden.

2. Suspicious fear.

The obstinacy in Essex in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands he would take revenge upon him. Clarendon.

3. Suspicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.

TO JEER. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.

The merry world did on a day
With his train hands and mates, agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in sport to jeer at me. Herbert.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomely jests, loud talking and jeering, which are called indecencies, and incivilities. Taylor.

TO JEER. v. a. To treat with scoffs.

J E O

My children abroad are driven to disavow me, for fear of being jeered. Howel.

JEER. n. f. [from the verb.] Scoff; taunt; biting jest; flout; jibe; mock.

Midas, expos'd to all their jeers,
Had lost his art, and kept his ears. Swift.

They tip the forehead in a jeer,
As who should say—the wants it here;
She may be handsome, young, and rich;
But none will burn her for a witch. Swift.

JEERER. n. f. [from jeer.] A scoffer; a scorner; a mocker.

JEERINGLY. adv. [from jeering.] Scornfully; contemptuously; in mock; in scoff.

To JERK. v. a. [gerneccan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written yerk.

I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I thought to 've yerk'd him here under the ribs. Shakespeare.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a-working. Swift.

To JERK. v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.

Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet,

But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.

JERK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A smart quick lash.

Contemn the silly taunts of fleeing buffoonery;
and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly. Gloucester.

Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis;
neither is it so much the mobility of a grave sentence, adicted by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden.

2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.

Weil run Tawney, the abbot's chuff;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. Ben Jonson.

Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks, or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.

JERKIN. n. f. [cypselkin, Saxon.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.

A man may wear it on both sides like a leather jerkin. Shakespeare.

Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us wool? Moor's Anecdote of King Charles.

Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor frieze jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. South.

Then strip thee of thy cannal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a flogging. Hudibras.
I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Gulliver's Travels.

JERKIN. n. f. A kind of hawk. Airfax.

This should be written gyrkin.

JERSEY. n. f. [from the island of Jersey,

of wool.

JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE. n. f. Sunflower, of which it is a species.

Jerusalem artichokes are increased by small offsets, and by quantizing the roots. Martimer.

JESS. n. f. [gesse, French; getto, Italian.]

Short straps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which she is held on the fist. Hunter.

If I prove her haggard,

Though that my jess were her dear heart strings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Shakespeare's Othello.

JESSAMINE. n. f. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of columbines;
Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jessamines. Spenser.

To JEST. v. n. [gesiculator, Latin.] To divert or make merry by words or action.

Yet not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced. Ecclus.

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?
—You may jest on; but I do not like these feveral councils. Shakespeare's Richard III.

JEST. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.

But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest?
Upon the company you overtake? Shakespeare.

As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon.

No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break jest upon them. Milton.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Prior.
When you the dullest of dull things have said,
And then ask pardon for the jest you made. Young.

2. The object of jests; a laughingstock.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest, I deserve
it. Shakespeare.

3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not serious; game,
not earnest.

That high All-see, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest, what I begg'd in jest. Shakespeare's Richard III.

When his playfellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew.

JESTER. n. f. [from jest.]

1. One given to merriment and pranks.

The skipping king, he rambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bawdy wits;
Soon kindled and soon burnt. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

2. One given to sarcasm.

Now as a *jest*er I accost you,
Which never yet one frier'd hath lost you. Swift.

3. Buffoon; jackpudding. A *jest*er, or licensed scoffer, was kept at court to the time of Charles the first.

Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.

JET. n. f. [gagac, Saxon; get, Dutch;
gagates, Latin.]

1. A beautiful fossil, of a firm and even structure, and a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay; of a fine deep black, having a grain resembling that of wood. It is confounded with cannal-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.

Black, ferriouth; coal-black, as jet. Shutsp.
There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakespeare.

The bottom clear
Now laid with many a jet,
Of teal pearl, &c the bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.

One of us in glass is jet,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.

Under flowing jet,
The neck slight shaded. Thomson's Summer.

2. [jet, Fr.] A spout or shoot of water.

Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the neat an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetic jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end. Blackmore.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gaudier's eyes who turns the rock. Pope.

3. A yard. Obsolete.

What ore! and unrobbed escapes,
Or pullet dare walk in their jets? Tupper's Hb.

To JET. v. n. [jetter, Fr.]

1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude; to jut out.

Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shakespeare.

2. To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait.

Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

3. To jolt; to be shaken.

Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. Wilmans.

JETSAM. n. f. [jetter, French.] Goods

JETSON. n. f. or other things which, having been cast overboard in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral.

JETTY. adj. [from jet.]

1. Made of jet.

2. Black as jet.

The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagascar, are of a jetty black. Brown.

Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd. Prior.

Nigrina black, and Meidamante brown,
Vied for his love in jetty bow's below. Pope.

JEWEL. n. f. [jouaen, Fr. jewelen, Dut.]

1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.

Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture. Shakespeare.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shakespeare.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world: a man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel. South.

2. A precious stone; a gem.

Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stone,
Stol'n by my daughter! Shakespeare.

Proud fame's imperial seat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pope.

3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.

Bid farewell to your sisters.
—Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you. Shakespeare's King Lear.

JEWEL-HOUSE, or Office. n. f. The place where the regal ornaments are repositied.

The king has made him master of the jewel- house. Shakespeare.

JEWELLER. n. f. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.

These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller. Bayle.

The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsic worth of a thing to a man of sense is another. L'Esperance.

I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Adelphi.

JEW'S-EAR. n. f. [from its resemblance of the human ear. Skinner.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in it ridges like those of the human ear. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder-trees decaying. The common people cure themselves of sore throats with a decoction of it in milk. Hill.

An herb called jews-ear groweth upon the lower parts of elder, and sometimes alhes: in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely. Heron's Natural History.

JEW'S-HARP. n. f. A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring of iron, which being struck by the hand, plays against the breath.

JEW'S-MALLOW. n. f. [corydalis, Latin.] Ranwolf says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Miller.

JEW'S-STONE. n. f. The clavated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering; about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter; ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky reddishness. It is found in Syria. Hill's Mat. Med.

Ir. conjunction. [γίγν, Saxon.]

2. Suppose it be so, or it were so, that. A hypothetical particle.

Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs or ands. Hooker.

If that rebellion
Came like itself in base and abject routs;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been there. Shakspeare's Henry 1v.

If they have done this deed, my noble lord.
—If I talk'th thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor. Shakspeare.

This seeing of all things, because we can desire to see all things, Malbranche makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This infallibility upon supposition, amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

All of them supposed the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxims to be good; if to be there were no resurrection. Atterbury.

Telephone, that oft hath heard my pray'r,
Assist, if Oedipus deserve thy care. Pope.

2. Whether or no.

Uncertain if by augury, or chance;
But by this easy rite they all advance. Dryden.

She doubts if two and two make four:
It can't—it may be—and it must;
To which of these must Alma trust?
Nay, further yet they make her go,
In doubting if she doubts or no. Prior.

3. Allowing that; suppose it be granted that.

Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments. Boyle.

IGNEOUS. adj. [igneus, Latin.] Fiery; containing fire; emitting fire; having the nature of fire.

That the fire burns by heat, leaves us still ignorant of the immediate way of igneous solutions. Glanville's Scaph.

IGNI'ROTENT. adj. [ignis and potens, Latin.] Preceding over fire.

Vulcan is called the power ignipotens. Pope.

IGNIS FATUUS. n. f. [Latin.] Will with the wisp; Jack with the lantern.

Vapours arising from purified waters are usually called ignes fatui. Newton's Opticks.

TO IGNITE. v. a. [from ignis, fire, Latin.] To kindle; to set on fire. A chymical term.

Take good firm chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it. Grew's Museum.

IGNITION. n. f. [ignition, Fr. from ignite.] The act of kindling, or of setting on fire.

The laborant stirred the kindled nitre, that the ignition might be presently communicated. Boyle.

Those black circular lines we see on dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, are the effects of ignition, by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe. Ray.

IGNITIBLE. adj. [from ignite.] Inflam- mable; capable of being set on fire. Not in use.

Such bodies only strike fire which have sul- phur or ignitable parts. Brown's Vulg. Err.

IGNI'VOMOUS. adj. [ignivomus, Latin.] Vomiting fire.

Vulcanus and ignivomus mountains are some of the most terrible shocks of the globe. Darham.

IGNOBLE. adj. [ignoble, Fr. ignobilis, Latin.]

1. Mean of birth; not noble; not of il- lustrious race.

As when in tumults rise th' ignoble crowd,
Mad are their motions, and their tongues are loud. Dryden.

2. Worthless; not deserving honour. Used of things or persons.

The noble idle doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants. Shak.

IGNOM'LY. adv. [from ignoble.] Ignomi- niously; meanly; dishonourably; re- proachfully; disgracefully.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives Religious, titled them the sons of God, Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame Ignomly! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Here, over-match'd in fight; in heaps they lie:
There scatter'd o'er the field ignomly fly. Dryden.

IGNOMINIOUS. adj. [ignominiosus, Fr. ignominiosus, Lat.] Mean; shameful; re- proachful; dishonourable. Used both of persons and things.

They with pale fear surpris'd, Fled ignominious. Milton.

Cethegus, though a traitor to the state,
And tortur'd, 'scap'd this ignominious fate. Dryd.

They gave, and the transfer'd the curst advice,
That monarchs should their inward soul disguise;
By ignominious arts, for sordid ends,
Should compliment their foes, and shun their friends. Prior.

Nor has this kingdom deserved to be sacrificed to one single, rapacious, obdurate, ignominious pro- jector. Swift.

IGNOMINIOUSLY. adv. [from ignominious.] Meanly; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully; reproachfully.

It is some allay to the infamy of him who died ignominiously to be buried privately. South.

IGNOMINY. n. f. [ignominie, French; ignominia, Latin.] Disgrace; re- proach; shame; infamy; meanness; dishonour.

Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heav'n:
Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave. Shaksp.
Strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise

And ignominy; yet to glory aspires,
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after con- quest. Addison.

IGNORAMUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest impanelled in the inqui- sition of causes criminal and publick; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they mislike their evidence as de- fective, or too weak to make good the presentment: the effect of which word so written is, that all farther inquiry up- on that party for that fault, is thereby stopped, and he delivered without farther answer. Cowell.

2. A foolish fellow; a vain uninstructed pretender. A low word.

Tell an ignoramus, in place and power, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the world, and he shall readily admit the commen- dation. South.

IGNORANCE. n. f. [ignorance, Fr. igno- ratio, Latin.]

1. Want of knowledge; unlearnedness.

If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same. Hooker.

Ignorance is the curse of God;
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakspeare.

Still banish your defenders, 'till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,

As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows. Shakspeare.

If we see right, we see our woes;
Then what avails it to have eyes?

From ignorance our comfort flows,
The only wretched are the wise! Prior.

2. Want of knowledge respecting some particular thing.

It is in every body's power to pretend igno- rance of the law. Sherlock.

3. Want of knowledge discovered by ex- ternal effect. In this sense it has a plural.

Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and igno- rances. Common Prayer.

Punish me not for my sins and ignorances. Tobit.

IGNORANT. adj. [ignorant, Fr. igno- rans, Latin.]

1. Wanting knowledge; unlearned; un- instructed; unenlightened.

So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast. Psalms.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time, and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

In such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' igno- rants

More learned than the ears. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

He that doth not know those things which are of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson.

Fool grant whate'er ambition craves,
And men, once ignorant, are slaves. Pope.

2. Unknown; undiscovered. This is merely poetical.

If you know aught, which does behave my knowledge

Thereof to be informed, imprison 't not In ignorant concealment. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

3. Without knowledge of some particular.

Let not judges be so ignorant of their own right, as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wise application of laws. Bacon's Essays.

O visions ill foreseen! Better had I Liv'd ignorant of future! so had borne
My part of evil only. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense.
Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame. Dryden.

5. Ignorantly made or done. Unusual.
His shipping,
Poor ignorant baubles, on our terrible seas
Like egg-shells mov'd. Shakespeare.

IGNORANT. n. f. One untaught, unlettered, uninstruited.

Did I for this take pains to teach
Our zealous ignorants to preach! Danham

IGNORANTLY. adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge; unskillfully; without information.

The greatest and most cruel foes we have,
Are those whom you would ignorantly save. Dryden.

When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are so ignorantly fond as to copy after them. Watts.

TO IGNORE. v. a. [ignorere, Fr. ignoro, Latin.] Not to know; to be ignorant of. This word Boyle endeavoured to introduce; but it has not been received.
I ignored not the Arctur interpretation, given by modern critics to divers texts, by me alleged. Boyle.

Philosophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they know from those that they ignore. Boyle.

IGNOSCIBLE. adj. [ignoscibilis, Latin.]
Capable of pardon. Did.

JIG. n. f. [giga, Italian; geige, Teuto-nick, a fiddle.] A light careless dance, or tune.

When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike musick, he appointed to them certain lascivious hays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former fierceness. Spenser on Ireland.

As fiddlers still,
Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you. Dan.

Posterity shall know that you dare, in these jig-given times, to countenance a legitimate poem. Ben Jonson.

All the swains that there abide,
With jigs and rural dance resort. Milton.
The muses blush'd to see their friends exalting
Those elegant delights of jig and vaulting. Farson.

They wrote to her friends in the country, that she should dance a jig next October in Westminster-hall. Arbuthnot.

Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,
Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains. Pope.

TO JIG. v. n. [from the noun.] To dance carelessly; to dance. Expressed in contempt.

As for the jiggling part and figures of dances,
I count that little. Locke.

JIG-MAKER. n. f. [jig and make.] One who dances or plays merrily.

Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

JIGGUMBO. n. f. [A cant word.] A trinket; a knick-knack; a slight contrivance in machinery.

He riddled all his jokes and fobs
Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs. Hudib.

JILT. n. f. [gilia, Icelandic, to entrap in an amour, Mr. Lye. Perhaps from giglot, by contraction; or jilet, or gillus, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name of a woman. It is also called jillet in Scotland.]

1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.

Avoid both courts and camps,
Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt
With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools. Urway.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.

When love was all an easy monarch's care,
Jilts rul'd the state, and statesmen farces writ. Pope.

TO JILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.

Tell who loves who;
And who is jilted for another's sake. Dryden.
Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted; bring witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

TO JILT. v. n. To play the jilt; to practise amorous deceptions.

She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt, and sham,
Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.

TO JINGLE. v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the sound intended to be expressed.] To clink;
to sound with a kind of sharp rattle.

What should the wars do with these jingling fools? Shakespeare.

With noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
We were awaked. Shakespeare's Tempest.
The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

You never with jingling words deceive the ear;
And yet, on humble subjects, great appear. Smith.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old! Pope.

JINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any clink, or sharp rattle.
2. It is used, I think, improperly, to express the correspondence of sound in the effects of rhyme.

Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit. Dryden

3. Any thing sounding; a rattle; a bell.
If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with tridles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon's Essays.

ILE. n. f. [corrupted from aïlle, French.]
A walk or alley in a church or publick building. Properly aile.

Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long iles extend. Pope.

ILE. n. f. [aïlle, French.] An ear of corn. Ainsworth.

ILEUS. n. f. [Latin.]

An ileus, commonly call'd the twisting of the guts, is really either a circumsolution, or inflection of one part of the gut within the other. Arbuth.

FLEX. n. f. [Latin.]

The ilex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a sort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chamberlained, as if it were painted. Nisbet.

ILIAC. adj. [iliacus, Latin.] Relating to the lower bowels.

The iliac passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.

ILIAC Passion. A kind of nervous colick, whose seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above; whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.

Those who die of the iliac passion have their bellies much swelled. Floyer on the Humours.

ILL. adv. [eale, Saxon.] The same. It is still retained in Scotland, and denotes each; as, ill one of you, every one of you. It also signifies, the same; as, Macintosh of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same; as, Macintosh of Macintosh.

Shepherds, should it not yshend
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
Of Rosalind, who knows not Rosalind,
That Colin made? ill can I you rehearse. Spenser.

ILL. adj. [contracted from Evil, and retaining all its senses.]

1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL.

These some ill planet reigns;
I must be patient, 'till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable. Shakespeare.
Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Neither is it ill air only that maketh an ill feast;
but ill ways, ill markets, and ill neighbours. Bacon's Essays.

Some, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company to be sad and ill-disposed: others, of a jovial nature, dispose them to be merry. Bacon.

2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense.

You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am on the sudden something ill. Shaksp.
I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governours falling ill in the time of the sieges. Temple.

ILL. n. f.

1. Wickedness; depravity; contrariety to holiness.

Ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Bacon.

Young men to imitate all ills are prone;
But are compell'd to avowice alone:
For then in virtue's shape they follow vice. Dryden's Juvenal.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden.

2. Misfortune; misery.

Who can all kinds of others ills escape,
Is but a brute at best in human shape. Tate.
Though plung'd in ills and exercis'd in care,
Yet never let the noble mind despair;
When press'd by dangers, and beset with foes,
The gods their timely succour interpose;
And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,
By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Philips.

By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Philips.

ILL. adv.

1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.
Ill at ease, both she and all her train
The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain. Dryden.

2. Not easily; with pain; with difficulty.
Thou desirest

The punishment all on thyself! alas!
Bear thine own first; ill able to sustain
His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part,
And my displeasure bear'st to ill. Milton.

Ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate,
When just approaching to the nuptial state. Dryden.

ILL, substantive or adverb, is used in composition to express any bad quality or condition, which may be easily understood by the following examples.

ILL. substantive.

Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

I have an ill divining soul:
Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakspeare.
No look, no last adieu before he went!
In an ill boding hour to slaughter sent. Dryden.

I know
The voice ill boding, and the solemn sound. Philips.
The wisest prince on earth may be deceived by the craft of ill designing men. Swift's Exam.

Your ill meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies,
Who threat'ning cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wing from me and tell to them my secret. Milton.

A spy distinguish'd from his airy stand,
To bribe whose vigilance, Antiphus told
A mighty sum of ill persuading gold. Pope.

ILL. adverb.
There founded an ill according cry of the enemies, and a lamentable noise was carried abroad. Wisdor.

My colleague,
Being so ill affected with the gout,
Will not be able to be there in person. Ben Jonson.

The examples
Of every minute's instance, present now,
Have put us in these ill beseeching arms. Shakspeare.
Lead back thy Saxons to their ancient Elbe:
I would restore the fruitful Kent, the gift
Of Vortigern, or Hengist's ill bought aid. Dryden.
We simple toasters take delight
To see our women's teeth look white;
And every faucy ill breed fellow Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.
The ungrateful treason of her ill chosen husband overthrows her. Sidney.
Envy, how does it look? How meagre and ill complexioned?
It preys upon itself, and exhausts the spirits. Collier.

There grows,
In my most ill compos'd affection such
A fleshless aversion, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shakspeare.
To what end this ill concerted lye,
Palpable and gross? Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Our generals at present are such as are likely to make the best use of their numbers, without throwing them away on any ill concerted projects. Adelphi on the War.

The second daughter was a peevish, forward, ill conditioned creature as ever was. Arbutnot.
No Persian arras hides his homely walls
With amick vells, which, through their shady folds,
Betray the streaks of ill dissembled gold. Dryden.
You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
*ill*ey'd unto you. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

I see thy sister's tears,
Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death,
In the pursuit of our ill fated loves. Adelphi.
Others ill fated are condemn'd to toil
Their tedious life. Prior.

Plain and rough nature, left to itself, is much better than an artificial ungratefulness, and such studied ways of being ill fashioned. Locke.

Much better, when I find virtue in a fair lodging, than when I am bound to seek it in an ill favoured creature, like a pearl in a dunghill. Sidney.

Near to an old ill favoured castle they meant to perform their unknighly errand. Sidney.

If a man had but an ill favoured nose, the deep thinkers would contrive to impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

I was at her house the hour she appointed.
—And you sped, sir?
—Very ill favour'dly. Shakspeare.

They would not make bold, as every where they do, to destroy ill formed and mis-shaped productions. Locke.

The faded dragon never guarded more
The golden fleece, than he his ill got store. Dryden.

Did him employ his care for these my friends,
And make good use of his ill gotten power,
By their living men much better than himself. Adelphi's Care.

Ill govern'd passions in a prince's breast,
Hazard his private, and the public rest. Waller.
That knowledge of theirs is very superficial and ill grounded. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Ill grounded passions quickly wear away;
What's built upon esteem can ne'er decay. Waller.
Hither, of ill join'd sons and daughters born,
First from the ancient world these giants came. Milton.

Not has he erred above once by ill judg'd superstition. Garth.
Did you never taste delicious drink out of an ill looked vessel? L'Estrange.

The match had been so ill made for Plexitus, that his ill led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come hither to his defence. Sidney.

These are the products
Of those ill mated marriages thou saw'st,
Where good with bad were match'd. Milton.
The works are weak, the garrison but thin,
Dispirited with frequent overthrows,
Already wavering on their ill mann'd walls. Dryden.

He will not hear me out!
Was ever criminal forbud to plead?
Curb their ill manner'd zeal. Dryden.
It is impossible for the most ill minded, avaricious, or cunning clergyman to do the least injustice to the meanest cottager, in any bargain for tythes. Swift.

Soon as the ill omend rumour reach'd his ear,
Who can describe th' amazement in his face! Dryden.

The eternal law of things must not be altered,
to comply with his ill ordered chance. Locke.
When you expate the scene,
Down the ill organ'd engines fall,
Off fly the vizards. Swift.

For Phthia fix'd is my return;
Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,
Than from an equal here sustain the public scorn. Dryden.

There motley images her fancy strike,
Figures ill pair'd, and families unlike. Pope.
Sparta has not to boast of such a woman;
Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love. Dryden.

I shall direct you, a task for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had opportunities to observe the follies of women. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well-seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new guist, able to make us swallow an ill relished portion. Locke.

Brothers, ill restrain'd, betray
Her thoughts intensive on the bridal day. Pope.
Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain. Dryden.

The god inform'd
This ill shap'd body with a daring soul. Dryden.
There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill suited: whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women; but little of solid meat for men. Dryden.

It does not belong to the priest's office to impose this name in baptism: he may refuse to pronounce the same, if the parents give them ludicrous, filthy, or ill sounding names. Achille.

Ill spirited Worcester, did we not fend grace,
Pardon and terms of love to all of you? Shakspeare.
From thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove An useless sorrow, and an ill star'd love. Prior.

Ah, why th' ill suiting pastime must I try?
To gloomy care my thoughts alone are free:
Ill the gay sports with troubled hearts agree. Pope.

Holding of ill tasted things in the mouth will make a small salvation. Grew.

The maid, with downcast eyes, and mute with
grief,
For death unfinish'd, and ill tim'd relief,
Stood fullen to her suit. Dryden's Ovid.

How should opinions, thus settled, be given up, if there be any suspicion of interest or design, as there never fails to be, where men find themselves ill treated? Locke.

That boldness and spirit which lads get amongst their playfellows at school, has ordinarily a mixture of rudeness and ill turned confidence; so that these misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned. Locke.

IL, before words beginning with I, stands for in.

ILLA'CHRYMABLE. adj. [illachrymabilis, Latin.] Incapable of weeping. *Did.

ILLA'PSI. n. f. [ilapsus, Latin.]

1. Gradual emission or entrance of one thing into another.

As a piece of iron red hot, by reason of the il-lapse of the fire into it, appears all over like fire;
so the souls of the blessed, by the illapse of the divine essence into them, shall be all over divine. Norris.

2. Sudden attack; casual coming.

Life is oft preserved
By the bold swimmer in the swift illapse
Of accident disastrous. Thomson's Summer.

TO ILLAQUEATE. v. a. [illaqueo, Latin.] To entangle; to entrap; to ensnare.

I am illaqueated, but not truly captivated into your conclusion. Moor's Divine Dialogues.

ILLAQUEATION. n. f. [from illaqueate.]

1. The act of catching or ensnaring.

The word in Matthew doth not only signify suspension, or pendulous illaqueation, but also seduction. Brown.

2. A snare; any thing to catch another;
a noose.

ILLATION. n. f. [illatio, Latin.] Inference; conclusion drawn from pre-misses.

Herein there seems to be a very erroneous illation from the indulgence of God unto Cain, concluding an immunity unto himself. Browne.

Illation is orders the intermediate ideas as to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together. Locke.

ILLATIVE. adj. [illatus, Latin.] Relating to illation or conclusion.

In common discourse or writing such casual particles as for, because, manifest the act of reasoning as well as the illative particles then and therefore. Watts.

ILLA'UDABLE. adj. [illaudabilis, Latin.]

Unworthy of praise or commendation.

Strength from truth divided, and from just,
illaudable, ought merits but dispraise. Milton.

ILLA'UDABLY. adv. [from illaudabilis.]

Unworthily; without deserving praise.

It is natural for all people to form, not illaudably, too favourable a judgment of their own country. Hume.

ILLE'GAL. adj. [in and legalis, Latin.]

Contrary to law.

No patent can oblige the subject against law, unless an illegal patent passed in one kingdom can bind another, and not itself. Swift.

ILLEGALITY. n. f. [from illegal.] Contrariety to law.

He wished them to consider what votes they had passed, of the illegality of all those commissions, and of the unjustifiableness of all the proceedings by virtue of them. Clarendon.

ILLE'GALLY. adv. [from illegal.] In a manner contrary to law.

ILL'GIBLE. adj. [in and legibilis, from lego, Latin.] What cannot be read.

The secretary poured the ink-box all over the writings, and so defaced them that they were made altogether illegible. Howel.

ILLEGITIMACY. n. f. [from illegitimate.] State of bastardy.

ILLEGITIMATE. adj. [in and legitimus, Latin.] Unlawfully begotten; not begotten in wedlock.

Grieve not at your state.
For all the world is ill'gitimate. Cleveland.

Being illegitimate, I was deprived of that endearing tenderness and uncommon satisfaction, which a good man finds in the love and conversation of a parent. Addison's Spectator.

ILLEGITIMATELY. adv. [from illegitimate.] Not in wedlock.

ILLEGITIMATION. n. f. [from illegitimate.] The state of one not begotten in wedlock.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of his hatred to both his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretences, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon.

ILLEVABLE. adj. [lever, Fr.] What cannot be levied or exacted.

He rectified the method of collecting his revenue, and removed obsolete and illevable parts of charge. Hale.

ILLFA'VOURED. adj. Deformed.
O, what a world of vile ill-favour'd fruits
Look handsome in three hundred pounds a-year! Shakespeare.

ILLFA'VOUREDLY. adv.

He took him very ill-favour'dly for the time, raging through the very bowels of his country, and plundering all wheresoever he came. Howel.

ILLFA'VOUREDNESS. n. f. Deformity.

ILLIBERAL. adj. [illiberalis, Latin.]

1. Not noble; not ingenuous.

The charity of most men is grown so cold, and their religion so illiberal. King Charles.

2. Not munificent; not generous; sparing.

Yet submit they did, and well too: an argument that that earth did not deal out their nourishment with an oversparing or illiberal hand. Westward's Natural History.

ILLIBERALITY. n. f. [illiberalitas, Lat. from illiberal.]

1. Meanness of mind.

2. Parsimony; niggardliness; want of munificence.

The illiberality of parents, in allowance towards their children, is an harmful error, and acquiesces them with shifts. Bacon.

ILLIBERALLY. adv. [from illiberal.] Disingenuously; meanly.

One that had been honest only upon surprise and incogitancy, illiberally retracts. Dray of Piety.

ILLICIT. adj. [illicitus, Lat. illicite, Fr.] Unlawful: as, an illicit trade.

To ILL'IGHTEN. v. n. [in and lighten.] To enlighten; to illuminate. A word, I believe, only in Raleigh.

Corporal light cannot be, because then it would not pierce the air, nor diaphanous bodies; and yet every day we see the air illighten'd. Raleigh.

ILLIMITABLE. adj. [in and limes, Lat.] That cannot be bounded or limited.

Although in adoration of idols, unto the sublimer heads, the worship perhaps might be symbolical; yet was the idiom direct in the people, whose credulity is illimitable, and who may be made believe that any thing is God. Brown.

With what an awful world-revolving power, Where first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along
The illimitable void! Thomson's Summer.

ILLIMITABLY. adv. [from illimitable.] Without susceptibility of bounds.

ILLIMITED. adj. [in and limes, Latin, illimité, French.] Unbounded; interminable.

ILLIMITEDNESS. n. f. [from illimited.] Exemption from all bounds.

The absoluteness and illimitedness of his commission was generally much spoken of. Clarendon.

ILLITERATE. adj. [illiteratus, Lat.] Unlettered; untaught; unlearned; unenlightened by science.

The duke was illiterate, yet had learned at court to supply his own defects, by the drawing unto him of the best instruments of experience. Watson.

Th' illiterate writer, empirick like, applies
To minds diseas'd unsafe chance remedies:
The learn'd in schools, where knowledge first began,
Studies with care th' anatomy of man;
Sees virtue, vice, and passions in their cause,
And fame from science, not from fortune draws. Dryden.

In the first ages of christianity not only the learned and the wise, but the ignorant and illiterate embraced torments and death. Tillotson.

ILLITERATENESS. n. f. [from illiterate.] Want of learning; ignorance of science.

Many acquainted with chymistry but by report, have, from the illiterateness and impostures of those that pretend skill in it, entertained an ill opinion of the art. Boyle.

ILLITERATURE. n. f. [in and literature.] Want of learning. Not much used.

The more usual causes of this deprivation are want of holy orders, illiterature, or inability for the discharge of that sacred function, and irreligion. Asplidge's Paragon.

ILLNESS. n. f. [from ill.]

1. Badness or inconvenience of any kind, natural or moral.

He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison-doors set open, is perfectly at liberty, though his preference be determined to stay, by the illness of the weather. Locke.

2. Sickness; malady; disorder of health.

On the Lord's day which immediately preceded his illness, he had received the sacrament. Atterbury.

Since the account her majesty received of the insulter faction, during her late illness at Windsor, she hath been willing to see them deprived of power to do mischief. Swift.

3. Wickedness.

Thou would be great;
Art not without ambition; but without
The illness should attend it. Shakespeare.

ILLNATURE. n. f. [ill and nature.] Habitual malevolence; want of humanity.

Illnature inclines a man to those actions that thwart and sour and disturb conversation, and consists of a proneness to do ill turns, attended with a secret joy upon the sight of any mischief that befalls another, and of an utter insensibility of any kindness done him. South.

ILLNATURED. adj. [from illnature.]

1. Habitually malevolent; wanting kindness or good-will; mischievous; desirous of another's evil.

These ill qualities denominate a person illnatured, they being such as make him grievous and uneasy to all whom he deals and associates himself with. South.

Stay, silly bird, th' illnature'd talk refuse;
Nor be the bearer of unwelcome news. Addison.

It might be one of those illnatured beings who are at enmity with mankind, and do therefore take pleasure in filling them with groundless terrors. Atterbury.

2. Philips applies it to land. Untractable; not yielding to culture.

The fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold on their illnatured land Induce. Philips.

ILLNATUREDNESS. n. f. [from illnatured.] Want of a kindly disposition.

ILLOGICAL. adj. [in and logical.]

1. Ignorant or negligent of the rules of reasoning.

One of the dissenters appeared to Dr. Sander-son so bold and illogical in the dispute, as forced him to say, he had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence, and less abilities. Walton.

2. Contrary to the rules of reason.

Reason cannot dispute and make an inference so utterly illogical. Dray of Piety.

ILLOGICALLY. adv. [from illogical.] In a manner contrary to the laws of argument.

To ILLU'DE. v. a. [illudo, Latin.] To deceive; to mock; to impose on; to play upon; to torment by some contemptuous artifice of mockery.

Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him
Afrail,
And fals'd oft his blow, t' illude him with such bait. Fairy Queen.

In vain we measure this amazing sphere,
While its circumference, seeming to be brought Ev'n into fancy'd space, illudes our vanquish'd thought. Prior.

To ILLUME. v. a. [illuminer, French.]

1. To enlighten; to illuminate.

When you fume star, that's westward from the pole,
Had made his course, t' illumine that part of heav'n,
Where now it burns. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. To brighten; to adorn.

The mountain's brow
Illum'd with fluid gold, his near approach Betokens. Thomson's Summer.

To ILLUMINE. v. a. [illuminer, Fr.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

To confirm his words, out flew
Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs.
Of mighty cherubims: the sudden blaze
Far round illumine'd hell. Milton.

What in me is dark,
Illumine! what is low, raise and support!
Milton.

2. To decorate; to adorn.

To Cato, Virgil paid one honest line;
O let my country's friends illumine mine. Pope.

To ILLUMINATE. v. a. [illuminer, French; lumen, Latin.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

Do thou vouchsafe, with thy love-kindling light,
T' illuminate my dim and dalled cyn. Spenser.

No painting can be seen in full perfection, but as all nature is illuminated by a single light. Watson.

He made the stars,
And set them in the firmament of heav'n,
T' illuminate the earth and rule the night. Milton.

Reason our guide, what can the more reply
Than that the sun illuminates the day;
Than that night rises from his absent ray,
And his returning lustre kindles day? Prior.

2. To adorn with festal lamps or bonfires.

3. To enlighten intellectually with knowledge or grace.

Satan had no power to abuse the illuminated world with his impostures. Sandys' Travels

When he illuminates the mind with supernatural light, he does not extinguish that which is natural. Locke

4. To adorn with pictures or initial letters of various colours.

5. To illustrate.
My health is insufficient to amplify these remarks, and to illuminate the several pages with variety of examples. Watts

ILLUMINATION. n. f. [illuminatio, Lat. illumination, Fr. from illuminate.]

1. The act of supplying with light.

2. That which gives light.
The sun is but a body illuminated, and an illumination created. Raleigh's History

3. Festal lights hung out as a token of joy.

Flowers are strew'd, and lamps in order plac'd,
And windows with illuminations grac'd. Dryd.

4. Brightness; splendour.
The illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work. Felton

5. Infusion of intellectual light; knowledge of grace.

Hymns and psalms are such kinds of prayer as are not conceived upon a sudden; but framed by meditation beforehand, or by prophetic illumination are inspired. Hooker

We have forms of prayer imploring God's aid and blessing for the illumination of our labours, and the tuning them into good and holy uses. Bacon

No holy passion, no illumination, no inspiration, can be now a sufficient commission to warrant those attempts which contradict the common rules of peace. Sprat's Sermons

ILLUMINATIVE. adj. [illuminativus, Fr. from illuminate.] Having the power to give light.

What makes itself and other things be seen, being accompanied by light, is called fire: what admits the illuminative action of fire, and is not seen, is called air. Digby on Boles

ILLUMINATOR. n. f. [from illuminate.]

1. One who gives light.

2. One whose business it is to decorate books with pictures at the beginning of chapters.

Illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work. Felton

ILLUSION. n. f. [illusio, Latin; illusion, Fr.] Mockery; false show; counterfeit appearance; error.

That, call'd by magic flights,
Shall trace such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shaksp.

There wanted not some about him, that would have persuaded him that all was but an illusion. Bacon's Henry VII.

So oft they fell
Into the same illusion; not as man Whom they triumph'd, once laps'd. Milton

An excuse for uncharitableness, drawn from pretended inability, as of all others the most general and prevailing illusion. Atterbury

Many are the illusions by which the enemy endeavours to cheat men into security, and defeat their salvation. Rogers

To dream once more I close my willing eyes;
Ye soft illusions, cease to deceive, cease! Pope

We must use some illusion to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries. Pope

ILLUSIVE. adj. [illusivus, Lat.] Deceiving by false show.

The heathen gods, who idle fables dress,
Illusive dreams in mystick forms express. Blackmore

While the fond soul
Wrapt in gay visions of unreal bliss,
Still paints th' illusive form. Thomson

ILLUSORY. adj. [from in and lusorius, Latin; illusoire, French.] Deceiving; fraudulent.

Subtily, in those who make profession to teach or defend truth, hath passed for a virtue: a virtue indeed, which, consisting for the most part in nothing but the fallacious and illusory use of obscure or deceitful terms, is only fit to make men more conceited in their ignorance. Locke

TO ILLUSTRATE. v. n. [illustrare, Latin; illustrer, French.]

1. To brighten with light.

2. To brighten with honour.
Matter to me of glory! whom their hate Illustrates, when they see all regal pow'r
Giv'n to me to quell their pride. Milton

Thence the ensu'd her garter'd knights among,
Illustrating the noble list. Philips

3. To explain; to clear; to elucidate.

Authors take up popular conceits, and from tradition unjustifiable, or false, illustrate matters of undeniable truth. Brown

ILLUSTRATION. n. f. [illustration, Fr. from illustrate.] Explanation; elucidation; exposition. It is seldom used in its original signification for material brightness.

Whoever looks about him will find many living illustrations of this emblem. L'Estrange

Space and duration, being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may perhaps be of use for their illustration. Locke

ILLUSTRATIVE. adj. [from illustrate.] Having the quality of elucidating or clearing.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people. Brown

ILLUSTRATIVELY. adv. [from illustrate.] By way of explanation.

Things are many times delivered hieroglyphically, metaphorically, illustratively, and not with reference to action. Brown

ILLUSTRIOUS. adj. [illustris, Lat. illustre, French.] Conspicuous; noble; eminent for excellence.

In other languages the most illustrious titles are derived from things sacred. South

Of every nation, each illustrious name,
Such toys as those have cleared into fame. Dryd.

ILLUSTRIOUSLY. adv. [from illustrious.] Conspicuously; nobly; eminently.

He declined not to appear at festival entertainments, that he might more illustriously manifest his charity. Atterbury

You carrying with you all the world can boast,
To all the world illustriously are lost. Pope

ILLUSTRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from illustrious.] Eminence; nobility; grandeur.

I'm. Contracted from I am.

Im is used commonly, in composition, for in before mute letters. What is im in Latin, when it is not negative, is often em in French; and our writers, as the Latin or French occurs to their minds, use im or em: formerly im was more common, and now em seems to prevail.

IMAGE. n. f. [image, Fr. imago, Lat.]

1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue; a picture.

Whose is this image and superscription? Matt.

The one is too; let an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's oldest son, evermore talking. Shakspere

Thy brother I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb. Shaksp.
The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion. South

Still must I be upbraided with your line;
But your late brother did not prize me less,
Because I could not boast of images. Dryden

2. An idol; a false god.

Manasseh set the carved image in God's house. Chronicles

3. A copy; representation; likeness.

Long may'st thou live,
To bear his image and renew his glories! Shak.
I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images:
But now two mirrors of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death. Shakspere's Richard III.

He made us to his image all agree:
That image is the soul, and that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden

4. Semblance; show; appearance.

Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary.

They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches,
The images of revolt. Shakspere's King Lear.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakspere's King John

The face of things a frightful image bears,
And present death in various forms appears. Dryden's Aeneid.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.

The image of the jest
I'll show you here at large. Shakspere

Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.
When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles: but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles. Watts

TO IMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy; to imagine.

How are immaterial substances to be imag'd,
Which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden

Image to thy mind
How our forefathers to the Stygian shades Went quick. Philips

His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior

Fate some future hard shall join,
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope

IMAGERY. n. f. [from image.]

1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.

Of marble stone was cut
An altar carv'd with cunning imagery. F. Queen.
When in those oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraitures, and imagery;
Where every figure to the life express'd
The godhead's pow'r. Dryden

Your gift shall two large goblets be
Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,
And high emboss'd. Dryden's Aeneid.

2. Show; appearance.

Things of the world fill the imaginative part
With beauties and fantastick imagery. Taylor

What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secluded from the world, and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear? Prior

All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.

3. Forms of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.

It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholic fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality. Atterbury.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.

I with there may be in this poem any influence of good imagery. Dryden.

IMAGINABLE. adj. [imaginable, French, from imagine.] Possible to be conceived.

It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem. South.

Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillotson.

IMAGINANT. adj. [imaginant, French.] Imagining; forming ideas.

We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMAGINARY. adj. [imaginaire, Fr. from imagine.] Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.

False furrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shakespeare.

Expectation whirls me round:
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shakespeare.

Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raskin's History.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer, Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison.

IMAGINATION. n. f. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French; from imagine.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.

Our simple apprehension of corporeal objects, if present, is sensé; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Glanville.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The fight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.

Sometimes despair darkens all her imagination; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sidney.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfeigned imagination,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shakspeare.

Better I were distressed,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imagination, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakspeare.

His imagination was often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.

3. Contrivance; scheme.

Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imagination against me. Lamentations.

4. An unsolid or fanciful opinion.

Vol. I.

We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself, leads us. Lacks.

IMAGINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, French; from imagine.] Fantastick; full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon.

Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gaude. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To IMAGINE. v. a. [imaginer, French; imaginar, Latin.]

1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.

Look what notes and garments be doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shakespeare.

Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings. Shakespeare.

What are our ideas of eternity and immortality but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition? Lacks.

2. To scheme; to contrive.

They intended evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device. Psalms.

IMAGINER. n. f. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.

The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up; and still he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the actor think. Bacon.

IMBECILE. adj. [imbecilis, Latin; imbecille, French.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.

To IMBECILE. v. a. [from the adjective. This word is corruptly written embezzle.] To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations.

Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbecilled. Taylor.

IMBECILITY. n. f. [imbecillité, French.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.

A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection.

No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker.

We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.

That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worse in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked. Hooker.

Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude sun would strike his father dead. Shakespeare.

Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them. King Charles.

When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward.

To IMBIBE. v. a. [imbibo, Latin; imbiber, French.]

1. To drink in; to draw in.

A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, soasmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Brown.

The torrent met itself imbiber
Commissions, penurites, and bribes. Swift.

Alumina'd wide,
The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To admit into the mind.

Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises. Hommond.

It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Lacks.

Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts.

3. To drench; to saturate; to soak.

This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbued with more acid, becomes a metallic salt. Newcom.

IMBIBER. n. f. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous steam. Delandrat.

IMBIBITION. n. f. [imbibition, Fr. from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.

Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon.

A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBITTER. v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.

2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which im-bitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison.

Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame? South.

3. To exasperate.

To IMBODY. v. a. [from body.]

1. To condense to a body.

2. To invest with matter; to make corporeal.

An opening cloud reveals
As heav'nly form imbody'd, and array'd
With robes of light. Dryden.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our imbody'd souls can bear without lassitude. Glanville's Scaphs.

3. To bring together into one mass or company; to incorporate.

I by vow am to imbody'd yours,
That she which marries you must marry me. Shakespeare.

Never since created, man
Met such imbody'd force, as nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry
Warr'd on by cranes. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Under their head imbody'd all in one. Milton.

Then Clausus came, who led a numerous band
Of troops imbody'd, from the Sabine land. Dryden.

4. To enclose. Improper.

In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbody'd in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marble. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBODY. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbody'd and imbruted, 'till the quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milnes.

IMB

The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbody and run into one. Locke.

To IMBOIL. v. n. [from boil.] To exultate; to effervesce; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron. Not in use.

With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imboiling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen.

To IMBOLDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage:

'Tis necessary he should die:
Nothing imboldens him so much as mercy. Shaksp.
I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something imbolden'd me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shaksp.
I was the more imbolden'd, because I found I had a soul congenial to his. Dryden.
Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;

Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay. Dryden.
Their virtues and superior genius imbolden'd them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Swift.

To IMBOSOM. v. a. [from bosom.]

1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.

The Father infinite,
By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the Son. Milton.
Villages imbosom'd lost in trees,
And spiry towns by furling columns mark'd. Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.

But glad desire, his late imbosom'd guest,
Yet but a babe, with milk of fight he nurs'd. Sidney.
Who glad 't' imbosom his affection vile,
Did all the might, more plainly to appear. Fairy Queen.

To IMBOUND. v. a. [from bound.] To enclose; to shut in.

That sweet breath,
Which was imboun'd in this beautiful clay. Shakspere.

To IMBOW. v. a. [from bow.] To arch; to vault.

Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond fure, Imbow'd with gold and gorgeous ornament. Fairy Queen.
Imbow'd windows be pretty retiring places for concealment: they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pale,
And love the high imbowed roof,
With antick pillar massy proof. Milton.

To IMBOWER. v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.

And flooping thence to Ham's imbowering
walks,
In spotless peace retired. Thomson.

IMBOWMENT. n. f. [from imbow.] Arch; vault.

The roof all open, not so much as any imbowment near any of the walls left. Bacon.

To IMBRANGLE. v. a. To entangle. A low word.

With subtle enweb cheats
They're catch'd in knotted law, like nets;
In which, when once they are imbrangl'd,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled. the Librar.

IMBRICATED. adj. [from imbrex, Lat.] Indented with concavities; hylt and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMB

IMBRICATION. n. f. [imbrex, Latin.] Concave indenture.

All is guarded with a well-made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Derham.

To IMBROWN. v. a. [from brown.] To make brown; to darken; to obscure; to cloud.

Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade
Imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs. Milton.
The foot grows black that was with dust imbrown'd,
And in thy pocket glingling halfpence found. Gay.

Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the pasterne. Pope.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands. Pope.

To IMBRUE. v. a. [from in and brue.]

1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long. This seems indifferently written with in or em. I have sustained both modes of writing.

Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embru'd,
And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd. Spenser.

There dreams a spring of blood to fast
From those deep wounds, as all embru'd the face
Of that accurc'd caltiff. Daniel's Civil War.

The merciless Turks, embru'd with the christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knox's History.
At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whole arrows in my blood their wings embrue. Sandys.

Lucius pities the offenders,
That would embrue their hands in Cato's blood. Julian.

Lo! these hands in murder are embru'd,
Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prejer.
There, where two ways in equal parts divide,
The direful monster from afar deserv'd
Two bleeding babes depending at her side;
Whole panting vitals, warm with life, she draws,
And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws. Pope.
His virgin sword Embrues yets embru'd;
The murder'rs fell, and blood atou'd for blood. Pope.

A good man chuses rather to pass by a verbal injury than embrue his hands in blood. Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.

Some bathed kisses, and did oft embrue
The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips. Fairy Queen.

To IMBRUTE. v. a. [from brute.] To degrade to brutality.

I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast; and mix with bestial slime,
This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton.

To IMBRUTE. v. n. To sink down to brutality.

The foul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbrutes and imbrutes, 'till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

To IMBUE. v. a. [imbuo, Latin.] This word, which seems wanting in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest. Imbu, French, the participial adj. is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe or soak with any liquor or die.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning; among whom I expect it will have a surer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles. Digby.

Clothes which have once been thoroughly imbued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colour. Boyle.

IMM

Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imburd and tinctured, with the colour. Woodward.

To IMBURSE. v. a. [bourse, Fr.] To stock with money. This should be emburse, from embourser, French.

IMITABILITY. n. f. [imitabilitas, Latin.] The quality of being imitable.

According to the multitariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

IMITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Lat. imitable, French.]

1. Worthy to be imitated; deserving to be copied.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course? Raleigh.

As acts of parliament are not regarded by most imitable writers, I account the relation of them improper for history. Hayward.

2. Possible to be imitated; within reach of imitation.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers. Atterbury.

To IMITATE. v. a. [imitor, Latin; imiter, French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of your muskets. Bacon.
Despise wealth, and imitate a god. Cowley.
I would cause some stablesman of note,
And imitate his language and his coat. Man of Tafles.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield,
And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryden.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what, imitate an ode! Gay.

IMITATION. n. f. [imitatio, Latin; imitation, French.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

2. That which is offered as a copy.
Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestic for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division on the ground-work. Dryden.

IMITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Latin.]

1. Inclined to copy; as, man is an imitative being.

2. Aiming at resemblance: as, painting is an imitative art.

3. Formed after some original.

This temple, less in form, with equal grace,
Was imitative of the first in Thrac. Dryden.

IMITATOR. n. f. [Latin; imitateur, Fr.] One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle, says
the poet. Dryden.

IMMACULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Lat. immaculé, French.]

1. Spotless; pure; undesiled.

To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ. Hosier.

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shaksp.
The king, whom catholics count a saint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure
From other guilts as that, Heav'n did not hold
One more immaculate. Denham's Sophy.

1. Pure; limpid.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,
Hath had his current and deriv'd himself. Shaksp.

To IMMA'NACLE. v. a. [from manacle.]
To fetter; to confine.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immanacled. Milton.

IMMA'NE. adj. [immanis, Latin.] Vail; prodigiously great.

IMMANENT. adj. [immanent, French; in and manco, Latin.] Intrinsic; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves, we ascribe intellects, volitions, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glasville.

What he wills and intends once, he wills and intends from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South.

IMMANIFEST. adj. [in and manifest.]
Not manifest; not plain. Not in use.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown. Brown.

IMMANITY. n. f. [immanitas, Latin.]
Barbarity; savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith. Shaksp.

IMMARCESCIBLE. adj. [in and marcesco, Latin.] Unfading. Ditt.

IMMARTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My pow'rs are unfit, Myself immartial. Chapman's Odyssey.

To IMMA'SK. v. a. [in and mask.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our noted outward garments. Shaksp.

IMMATERIAL. adj. [immateriel, French;
in and materia, Latin.]

1. Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual,
the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces,
where there is nothing but light and immortality;
no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon;
but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever, do dwell. Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,
Besides the body, in which the it confin'd;
So hath the not a body of her own,
But is a spirit, and immaterial mind. Davies.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us.

Dods of Poetry.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillot.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writtings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATERIA'LITY. n. f. [from immaterial.]
Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATERIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.]
In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporal rays do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMMATERIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Latin.] Distinct from matter;
incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immateralized spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glentville's Scyllis.

IMMATERIALNESS. n. f. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATERIATE. adj. [in and materia, Latin.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; wanting body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immaterial, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

After a long enquiry of things immetto in matter, I interpose some object which is immate-riate, or less material; such as this of sounds. Bacon.

IMMATURE. adj. [immaturus, Lat.]

1. Not ripe.

2. Not perfect; not arrived at fulness or completion.

The bold enterprize of Panama was an ill measured and immature counsel, grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them. Bacon.

This is your time for faction and debate,
For partial favour, and permitted hate:
Let now your immature dissension cease, Sit quiet. Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature, if a man lives till seventy. Taylor.

IMMATURELY. adv. [from immature.]
'Too soon; too early; before ripeness or completion.

IMMATURENESS. n. f. [from immature.]

IMMATUREITY. n. f. Unripeness; incompleteness; a state short of completion.

I might reasonably expect a pardon from the ingenious for faults committed in an immaturity of age and judgment. Glasville.

IMMEABILITY. n. f. [immeabilis, Latin.]

Want of power to pass. So it is used in the example; but it is rather, incapability of affording passage.

From this phlegm proceed white cold tumours, viscidities, and consequently immeability of the juices. Aschwin.

IMMEASURABLE. adj. [in and measure.]

Immense; not to be measured; indefinitely extensive.

Churches reared up to an height immeasurable, and adorned with famous beauty in their restoration than their founders before had given them. Hooker.

From the shore

They view'd the sail immeasurable abyss, Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild. Milton.

Immeasurable strength they might behold
In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean. Milton.

What a glorious show are those beings entertained with, that can see such tremendous objects wandering through those immeasurable depths of ether! Addison's Guardian.

Not friends are there, nor vessels to convey,
Not oars to cut the immeasurable way. Pope.

IMMEASURABLY. adv. [from immeasurable.] Immensely; beyond all measure.

The Spaniards immeasurably bewail their dead.

Spenser.

There ye shall be fed, and fill'd
Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey. Milton.

IMMECHANICAL. adj. [in and mechanical.]

Not according to the laws of mechanicks.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature. Cheyne.

Nothing will clear a head possessed with *imme-

IMMEDIACY. n. f. [from immediate.]

Personal greatness; power of acting without dependance. This is a harsh word, and sense peculiar, I believe, to Shakspere.

He led our pow'rs,

Bore the commission of my place and person,
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And call itself your brother. King Lear.

IMMEDIATE. adj. [immediat, French;
in and medius, Latin.]

1. Being in such a state with respect to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes of the deluge, the fumes and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens. Burnet.

2. Not acting by second causes.

It is much to be ascribed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleasure. Abbot.

3. Instant; present with regard to time.
Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief
Must not be toft and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Shakspere.

Death denounc'd that day,
Which he presumes already vain, and void,
Because not yet inflicted, as he fear'd
By some immediate stroke. Milton.

But she, howe'er of vict'ry sure,
Contents the wreath too long delay'd;
And arm'd with more immediate pow'rs,
Calls cruel silence to her aid. Prior.

IMMEDIATELY. adv. [from immediate.]

1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop, is that which vests the whole property of a thing in God. Smith.

2. Instantly; at the time present; without delay.

Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender, and with him at Eaton immediately to marry. Shakspere.

IMMEDIATENESS. n. f. [from immediate.]

1. Presence with regard to time.

2. Exemption from second or intervening causes.

IMMEDICABLE. adj. [immedicabilis, Lat.]

Not to be healed; incurable.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milnes's Agonizer.

IMMEMORABLE. adj. [immemorabilis,
Latin.] Not worth remembering.

IMMEMORIAL. adj. [immemorial, French; in and memoria, Latin.] Past time of memory; so ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

All the laws of this kingdom have some memorial in writing, yet all have not their original in writing; for some obtained their force by immemorial usage or custom. Hale.

By a long immemorial practice, and prescription of an aged thorough-paced hypocrisy, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at first practice of it, they themselves knew to be a cheat. South.

IMMENSE. adj. [immense, French; immensus, Latin.] Unlimited; unbounded; infinite.

O goodness infinite! goodness immense!

That all this good of evil shall produce! Milton.

As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, so infinite or immense essence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing distinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we speak of immensity, and of God as of an immense being. Grew.

IMMENSELY. adv. [from immense.] Infinitely; without measure.

We shall find that the void space of our system is immensely bigger than all its corporeal parts. Bentley.

IMMENSITY. n. f. [immensité, French.] Unbounded greatness; infinity.

By the power we find in ourselves of repeating, as often as we will, any idea of space, we get the idea of immensity. Locke.

He that will consider the immensity of this fabric, and the great variety that is to be found in this inconsiderable part of it which he has to do with, may think that in other mansions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

All these illustrious worlds,
And millions which the glass can ne'er descry,
Lost in the wilds of vast immensity,
Are suns, are centers. Blackmore's Creation.

IMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from immensurable.] Impossibility to be measured.

IMMENSURABLE. adj. [in and mensurabilis, Latin.] Not to be measured.

TO IMMERGE. v. a. [immergo, Latin.] To put under water.

IMMERIT. n. f. [immerito, Latin.] Want of worth; want of desert. This is a better word than demerit, which is now used in its stead.

When I receive your lines, and find these expressions of a passion, reason and my own immerit tell me it must not be for me. Suckling.

TO IMMERSE. v. a. [immersus, Latin.]

1. To put under water.
2. To sink or cover deep.

More than a mile immers'd within the wood;
At once the wind was laid. Dryden.

They observed that they were immersed in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the same manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world. Woodward.

3. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of saints, should now have less appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring state or kingdom: whether they be such as continue still immersed in the errors of the church of Rome, or such as are recovered out of them. Addison's Freeholder.

We are prone to engage ourselves with the business, the pleasures, and the amusements of this world: we give ourselves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerse ourselves too deeply in the enjoyments of them. Atterbury.

It is impossible to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immersed in the enjoyments of this. Atterbury.

IMMERSE. adj. [immersus, Lat.] Buried; covered; sunk deep.

After long inquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as this of sounds; that the intellect may become not partial. Bacon.

IMMERSION. n. f. [immersio, Latin; immersio, French.]

1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the surface.

Achilles's mother is said to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immersion. Addison's Guardian.

2. The state of sinking below the surface of a fluid.

3. The state of being overwhelmed or lost in any respect.

Many persons, who, through the heat of their lusts and passions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immersion in the affairs of life, swerve from the rules of their holy faith; yet would, upon extraordinary warning, be brought to comply with them. Atterbury.

IMMETHODICAL. adj. [in and methodical.] Confused; being without regularity; being without method.

M. Bayle compares the answering of an immetho- dical author to the hunting of a duck: when you have him full in your sight, he gives you the slip, and becomes invisible. Addison.

IMMETHODICALLY. adv. [from immetho- dical.] Without method; without order.

IMMINENCE. n. f. [from imminent.] Any ill impending; immediate or near danger. Not in use.

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;
But dare all imminence, that gods and men
Address their dangers in. Shakespeare.

IMMINENT. adj. [imminent, French; imminens, Latin.] Impending; at hand; threatening. Always in an ill sense.

What dangers at any time are imminent, what evils hang over our heads, God doth know, and not we. Hooker.

Three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death. Shakespeare.

These she applies for warnings and portents
Of evils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day. Shakespeare.

To them preach'd
Conversion and repentance, as to souls
In prison, under judgments imminent. Milton.
Men could not fail without imminent danger and inconveniences. Pope.

TO IMMINGLE. v. a. [in and mingle.] To mingle; to mix; to unite.

Some of us, like thee, through stormy life
Tost'd, tempest-beaten, ere we could attain
This holy calm, this harmony of mind,
Where purity and peace immingle charms. Thomson.

IMMINUTION. n. f. [from imminuo, Latin.] Diminution; decrease.

These revolutions are as exactly uniform as the earth's are, which could not be, were there any place for chance, and did not a Providence continually oversee and secure them from all alteration or imminution. Ray on the Creation.

IMMISCIBILITY. n. f. [from immiscible.] Incapacity of being mingled.

IMMISCIBLE. adj. [in and miscible.] Not capable of being mingled. Clarissa.

IMMISSION. n. f. [immissio, Latin.] The act of sending in; contrary to emission.

TO IMMIT. v. n. [immitto, Latin.] To send in.

TO IMMIX. v. a. [in and mix.] To mingle.

Samson, with these immixt, inevitably Pulld'd down the same destruction on himself. Milton.

IMMIXABLE. adj. [in and mix.] Impossible to be mingled.

Fill a glass sphere with such liquors as may be clear, of the same colour, and immixable. Wilkins.

IMMOBILITY. n. f. [immobilité, French; from immobilis, Latin.] Unmoveableness; want of motion; resistance to motion.

The course of fluids through the vascular solids must in time harden the fibres, and abolish many of the canals; from whence diness, weakness, immobility, and debility of the vital force. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

IMMODERATE. adj. [immodéré, Fr. immoderatus, Lat.] Excessive; exceeding the due mean.

One means, very effectual for the preservation of health, is a quiet and cheerful mind, not afflicted with violent passions, or distracted with immoderate cares. Ray on the Creation.

IMMODERATELY. adv. [from immoderate.] In an excessive degree.

Immoderately the weeps for Tybalt's death. Shakespeare.

The heat weakened more and more the arch of the earth, sucking out the moisture that was the cement of its parts, drying it immoderately, and chapping it. Burnet's Theory.

IMMODERATION. n. f. [immoderation, French; from immoderate.] Want of moderation; excess.

IMMODEST. adj. [immodeste, French; in and modest.]

1. Wanting shame; wanting delicacy or chastity.

She rail'd at herself, that she should be so im- modest to write to one that she knew would flout her. Shakespeare.

2. Unchaste; impure.
Immodest deeds you hinder to be wrought;
But we proscribe the least immodest thought. Dryden.

3. Obscene.

'Tis needful that the most immodest word
Be look'd upon and learn'd; which once attain'd,
Comes to no farther use
But to be known and hated. Shakespeare.

Immodest words admit of no defence,
For want of decency is want of sense. Johnson.

4. Unreasonable; exorbitant; arrogant.
- IMMODESTY. n. f. [immodestie, French; from immodest.] Want of modesty; indecency.

It was a piece of immodesty. Pope.

TO IMMOLATE. v. a. [immolo, Lat. immoler, Fr.]

1. To sacrifice; to kill in sacrifice.

These courtiers of applause being oftentimes reduced to live in want, these costly trifles to engrossing all that they can spare, that they frequently enough are forced to immolate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

2. To offer in sacrifice.

Now immolate the torques, and mix the wine,
Secret to Neptune, and the pow'r's divine. Pope.

IMMOLATION. n. f. [immolation, French; from immolare.]

1. The act of sacrificing.

In the picture of the immolation of Isaac, or Abraham sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy. Brown.

2. A sacrifice offered.

We make more barbarous immolations than the most savage heathens. Decay of Piety.

IMMOMENT. adj. [in and moment.] Trifling; of no importance or value. A barbarous word.

I M M

I some lady-tributes have reserv'd,
Immortal toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern friends withal. Shakspeare.
IMMORTAL. adj. [in and moral.]

1. Wanting regard to the laws of natural religion; as, a flatterer of vice is an immoral man.

2. Contrary to honesty; dishonest; as, desertion of a calumniated friend is an immoral action.

IMMORALITY. n. f. [from immoral.]
Dishonesty; want of virtue; contrariety to virtue.

Such men are put into the commission of the peace who encourage the grossest immoralities, to whom all the bawds of the ward pay contribution. Swift.

IMMORTAL. adj. [immortalis, Latin.]

1. Exempt from death; being never to die,

To the king eternal, immortal, invincible, the only wife God, be glory for ever. 1 Tim.

Her body sleeps in Capulet's monument,
And her immortal part with angels lives. Shakspeare.

There was an opinion in grots, that the soul was immortal. Abbot.

The Paphian queen,
With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,
Like terror did among th' immortals breed,
Taught by her wound that goddesses may bleed. Waller.

2. Never-ending; perpetual.

Give me my robe, put on my crown: I have Immortal longings in me. Shakspeare.

IMMORTALITY. n. f. [immortalité, Fr. from immortal.]
1. Exemption from death; life never to end.

This corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal, immortality. 1 Corinthians.

Quaff immortality, and joy. Milton.

He th' immortality of souls proclaim'd,
Whom th' oracle of men the wisest nam'd. Denham.

His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immutability of God, and the nature of his immortality. Cheyne.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

2. Exemption from oblivion.

TO IMMORTALIZE. v. a. [immortaliser, French; from immortal.]

1. To make immortal; to perpetuate; to exempt from death.

For mortal things desire their like to breed,
That so they may their kind immortalize. Davies.

2. To exempt from oblivion.

Drive them from Orleans, and be immortaliz'd. Shakspeare.

TO IMMORTALIZE. v. n. To become immortal. This word is, I think, peculiar to Pope.

Fix the year precise,
When British hands begin to immortalize. Pope.

IMMORTALLY. adv. [from immortal.]
With exemption from death; without end.

There is your crown;
And he that wears the crown immortally,
Long guard it yours! Shakspeare's Henry IV.

What pity 'tis that he cannot wallow immortally in his sensual pleasures! Bentley.

IMMOVABLE. adj. [in and moveable.]

We shall not question his removing the earth, when he finds an immovable base to place his engine upon. Brown.

2. Not liable to be carried away; real in law.

I M M

When an executor meddles with the immovable estate, before he has seized on the moveable goods, it may be then appealed from the execution of sentence. Ayliffe's Paragon.

3. Unshaken; unaffected.

How much happier is he, who, centering on himself, remains immovable, and smiles at the madness of the dance about him! Dryden.

IMMOVABLY. adv. [from immovable.] In a state not to be shaken.

Immovably firm to their duty, when they could have no prospect of reward. Atterbury.

IMMUNITY. n. f. [immunité, French; immunitas, Latin.]

1. Discharge from any obligation.

Of things harmless whatsoever there is, which the whole church doth observe, to argue for any man's immunity from observing the same, it were a point of most intemperate madgels. Hooker.

2. Privilege; exemption from onerous duties.

Granting great immunities to the commons, they prevailed so far as to cause Palladius to be proclaimed successor. Stacey.

Simon sent to Demetrius, to the end he should give the land an immunity, because all that Tryphon did was to spoil. 1 Maccabees.

The laity invidiously aggravate the rights and immunities of the clergy. Spear's Sermons.

3. Freedom.

Common apprehensions entertain the antidotal condition of Ireland, conceiving only in that land an immunity from venomous creatures. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But this annex'd condition of the crown, immunity from errors, you disown. Dryden.

TO IMMURE. v. a. [in and murus, Lat. emurer, old French, so that it might be written emure.] To enclose within walls; to confine; to shut up; to imprison.

Pity, you ancient stones, these tender babes,
Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls! Shakspeare.

One of these three contains her heav'nly picture;
And shall I think in slaves she's immur'd! Shakspeare.

At the first descent on shore he was not immured with a wooden vessel, but he did counterbalance the landing in his long-boat. Wotton.

Lyfianthus immur'd it with a wall. Sandys.

Though a foul foolish prison her immure
On earth, she, when escap'd, is wife and pure. Denham.

IMMURE. n. f. [from the verb.] A wall; an enclosure, as in Shakspeare, but perhaps no where else.

Their vow is made
To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps. Shakspeare.

IMMUSICAL. adj. [in and musical.] Inharmonious; wanting proportion of sound.

All sounds are either musical, which are ever equal, or immusical, which are ever unequal, as the voice in speaking, and whispering. Baron.

We consider the immusical note of all swans we ever beheld or heard of. Brown.

IMMUTABILITY. n. f. [immutabilitas, Lat. immutabilité, Fr. from immutable.] Exemption from change; invariableness; unchangeableness.

The immutability of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner. Hooker.

His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immutability of God. Cheyne.

IMMUTABLE. adj. [immutabilis, Lat.] Unchangeable; invariable; unalterable.

I M P

By two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lye, we have a strong consolation. Hebrews.

Thy threat'nings, Lord, as thine, thou may'st revoke;

But if immutable and fix'd they stand,
Continue still thyself to give the stroke,
And let not foreign foes oppress thy land. Dryden.

IMMUTABLY. adv. [from immutable.] Unalterably; invariably; unchangeably.

His love is like his essence, immutably eternal. Boyle.

IMP. n. f. [imp, Welsh, a shoot, a sprout, a sprig.]

1. A son; the offspring; progeny.

That noble imp your son. Lord Cromwell to King Henry.

And thou, most dreadful imp of highest Jove, Fair Venus' son. Fairy Queen.

The tender imp was weaned from the teat. Fairfax.

A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakspeare.

2. A subaltern devil; a puny devil. In this sense it is still retained.

Such we deny not to be the imps and limbs of Satan. Hooker.

The serpent after long debate, irresolute
Of thoughts revolv'd, his final sentence chose,
Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom
To enter, and his dark suggestions hide
From sharpest sight. Milton's Parad. Lost.

As soon as you can hear his knell,
This god on earth turns d— in hell;
And, to his ministers of state,
Transform'd to imps, his levee wait. Swift.

TO IMP. v. a. [impio, to engraff, Welsh.] To lengthen or enlarge with any thing adscititious. It is originally a term used by falconers, who repair a hawk's wing with adscititious feathers.

If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp out our drooping country's broken wings. Shakspeare.

New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false north displays
Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.

Help, ye tart satyrists, to imp my rage
With all the scorpions that should whip this age. Cleveland.

With cord and canals from rich Hamburg sent,
His navy's molted wings he imps once more. Dryden.

New creatures rise,
A moving mass at first, and short of thigh;
Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings,
The grubs proceed to bees with pointed stings. Dryden.

The Mercury of heav'n, with silver wings
Imps for the flight, to overtake his ghost. Southern.

TO IMPACT. v. a. [impactus, Latin.] To drive close or hard.

They are angular; but of what particular figure is not easy to determine, because of their being impacted so thick and confusedly together. Windward on Fagfils.

TO IMPAINT. v. a. [in and paint.] To paint; to decorate with colours. Not in use.

Never yet did infurrection want
Such water-colours to impaint his cause. Shakspeare.

TO IMPAIR. v. a. [empiror, to make worse, French. Skinner.] To diminish; to injure; to make worse; to lessen in quantity, value, or excellence.

To change any such law, must needs, with the common sort, impair and weaken the force of those grounds whereby all laws are made effectual. Hooker.

Objects divine
Must needs impair, and weary human sense. Milton.

IMP

That soon refresh'd him weary'd, and repair'd
What hunger, if aught hunger had impair'd,
Or thirst. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms slow,
But felt the approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.
In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years. Pope.

TO IMPAIR. v. n. To be lessened or worn out.

Flesh may impair, quoth he; but reason can repair. Fairy Queen.

IMPAIR. n. f. [from the verb.] Diminution; decrease. Not used.

A loadstone, kept in undue position, that is, not lying on the meridian, or with its poles inverted, receives in longer time impair in activity and exchange of faces, and is more powerfully preferred by fire than dross of steel. Brown.

IMPAIRMENT. n. f. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.

His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMPALEABLE. adj. [impalpable, French; in and palpable.] Not to be perceived by touch.

If beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Boyle.

TO IMPARADISE. v. a. [imparadisare, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.

This imparadis'd neighbourhood made Zelmene's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did over-cloud it. Sidney.

All my souls be Imparadis'd in you, in whom alone
I understand, and grow, and see. Dante.
Thus these two,

Imparadis'd in one another's arms,
The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss. Milton's Paradise Lost.

IMPARITY. n. f. [imparitas, impar, Lat.]

1. Inequality; disproportion.

Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the jejuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Bacon.

2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.

What verity is there in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd; and so by parity or imparity of letters in men's names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO IMPARK. v. a. [in and park.] To enclose with a park; to sever from a common.

TO IMPART. v. a. [impartior, Latin.]

1. To grant; to give.

High state and honours to others impart,
But give me your heart. Dryden.

2. To make known; to show by words or tokens.

Gentle lady,
When first I did impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins. Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

As on confession the revealing is for the ease of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their minds. Bacon.

Thou to me thy thoughts
Wast wont, I mine to thee wast wont to impart. Milton.

3. To communicate; to grant as to a partaker.

I find thee knowing of thyself;
Expressing well the spirit within thee free,
My image, not imparted to the brute. Milton.

IMP

IMPARTIAL. adj. [impartial, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons: an impartial judge; an impartial sentence.

Success I hope, and fate I cannot fear:
Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;
Joy is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden.

IMPARTIALITY. n. f. [impartialité, Fr. from impartial.] Equitableness; justice; indifference.

A pious and well-disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside it. South.

IMPARTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiassed judgment; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.

Since the scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. South.

IMPARTIBLE. adj. [impartible, French; from impart.] Communicable; that may be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant, though used by few writers.

The same body may be conceived to be more or less impartible than it is active or heavy. Digby.

IMPASSABLE. adj. [in and passable.] Not to be passed; not admitting passage; impervious.

There are in America many high and impassable mountains, which are very rich. Raleigh.

Over this gulf
Impassable, impervious; let us try
To found a path from hell to that new world. Milton.

When Alexander would have passed the Ganges, he was told by the Indians that all beyond it was either impassable marshes, or sandy deserts. Temple.

IMPASSIBILITY. n. f. [impassibilité, Fr. from impassible.] Exemption from suffering; insusceptibility of injury from external things.

Two divinities might have pleaded their prerogative of impassibility, or at least not have been wounded by any mortal hand. Dryden.

IMPASSIBLE. adj. [impassible, French; in and passio, Latin.] Incapable of suffering; exempt from the agency of external causes; exempt from pain.

If the upper soul check what is consented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope that, after a few years of sensuality, that rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, drop into a perpetual impassible nothing, take a long progress into a land where all things are forgotten, this would be some colour. Hammond.

Secure of death, I should condemn thy dart,
Though naked, and impassible depart. Dryden.

IMPASSIBLNESS. n. f. [from impassible.] Impassibility; exemption from pain.

How shameful a partiality is it, thus to reserve all the sensualities of this world, and yet cry out for the impassiblness of the next? Decay of Piety.

IMPASSIONED. adj. [in and passion.] Disordered by passion.

So, standing, moving, or to height upgrown,
The tempest, all impassion'd, thus began. Milton.

IMPASSIVE. adj. [in and passive.] Exempt from the agency of external causes.

IMP

She told him what those empty phantoms were,
Forms without bodies, and impassive air. Dryden.
Pale suns, unfelt at distance, roll away;
And on the impassive ice the lightnings play. Pope.

IMPA'STED. adj. [in and paste.] Concreted as into paste. Not in use.

Horribly tricked
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons, Bak'd and impast with the parching fires. Shakspeare.

IMPA'TIENCE. n. f. [impatience, French; impatientia, Latin.]

1. Inability to suffer pain; rage under suffering.

All the power of his wit has given way to his impatience. Shakspeare's King Lear.

The experiment I resolv'd to make was upon thought, and not rashness or impatience. Temple.

2. Vehemence of temper; heat of passion.

3. Inability to suffer delay; eagerness.

IMPA'TIENT. adj. [impatient, French; impatiens, Latin.]

1. Not able to endure; incapable to bear: with of.

Fame, impatient of extremes, decays
Not more by envy than excess of praise. Pope.

2. Furious with pain; unable to bear pain.

The tortur'd savage turns around,
And sings about his foam, impatient of the wound. Dryden.

3. Vehemently agitated by some painful passion: with at before the occasion: with of impatience is referred more to the thing, with at to the person.

To be impatient at the death of a person, concerning whom it was certain he must die, is to mourn because thy friend was not born an angel. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

4. Hot; hasty.

The impatient man will not give himself time to be informed of the matter that lies before him. Addison's Spectator.

5. Eager; ardently desirous; not able to endure delay: with for before the thing desired.

The mighty Cæsar waits his vital hour,
Impatient for the world, and grasps his promis'd pow'r. Dryden.

On the seas prepar'd the vessel stands;
Th' impatient mariner thy speed demands. Pope.

IMPA'TIENTLY. adv. [from impatient.]

1. With rage, under uneasiness.

2. Passionately; ardently.

He considered one thing so impatiently, that he would not admit any thing else to be worth consideration. Glarendon.

3. Eagerly; with great desire.

TO IMPATRONIZE. v. a. [impatroniser, Fr. in and patronize.] To gain to one's self the power of any feignory. This word is not usual.

The ambition of the French king was to impatronize himself of the dutchy. Bacon.

TO IMPAWN. v. a. [in and pawn.] To impignorate; to pawn; to give as a pledge; to pledge.

Go to the king, and let there be impawn'd
Some surety for a safe return again. Shakspeare.

Many now in health

Shall drop their blood, in apprehension

Of what your reverence shall invite us to;

Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,

How you awake our sleeping sword of war. Shakspeare.

TO IMPEACH. v. a. [empecher, Fr.]

1. To hinder; to impede. This sense is little in use.

Each door he opened without any breach;
There was no bar to stop, no foe him to impeach.
His sons did impeach his journey to the Holy Land, and vexed him all the days of his life.

If they will impeach the purposes of an army, which they have no reason to think themselves able to resist, they put themselves out of all expectation of mercy.

A delusion on my throat impeached my utterance.

2. To accuse by public authority.

They were both impeached by a house of commons.

Great dissensions were kindled between the nobles and commons on account of Coriolanus, whom the latter had impeached.

IMPEACH. n. s. [from the verb.] Hin- derance; let; impediment.

Why, what an intricate impeach is this!
If here you bous'd him, here he would have been;

If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly.

IMPEACHABLE. adj. [from impeach.] Ac- cusable; chargeable.

Had God omitted by positive laws to give religion to the world, the wisdom of his providence had been impeachable.

IMPEACHER. n. s. [from impeach.] An accuser; one who brings an accusation against another.

Many of our fiercest impeachers would leave the delinquent to the merciful indulgence of a Saviour.

IMPEACHMENT. n. s. [from impeach.]

1. Hinderance; let; impediment; ob- struction. Not in use.

Tell us what things, during your late continuance there, are most offensive, and the greatest impeachment to the good government thereof.

Tell thy king I do not seek him now;
But could be willing to march on to Calais,
Without impeachment.

Neither is this accession of necessity any impeachment to christian liberty, or enjoining of men's consciences.

2. Public accusation; charge preferred.

The king, provok'd to it by the queen,
Devil'd impeachments to imprison him.

The lord Somers, though his accusers would gladly have dropped their impeachment, was insistent with them for the prosecution.

The consequences of Coriolanus's impeachment had like to have been fatal to their state.

To IMPEACH. v. a. [in and pearl.]

1. To form in resemblance of pearls.

Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or hairs of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impeach'd on every leaf, and ev'ry flow'r.

2. To decorate as with pearls.

The dew of the morning impeach'd every thorn, and scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of
the earth.

IMPECCABILITY. n. s. [impeccabilité, Fr. from impeccabile.] Exemption from sin; exemption from failure.

Infallibility and impeccability are two of his attributes.

IMPECCABLE. adj. [impeccable, Fr. in and pecco, Lat.] Exempt from possibi- lity of sin.

That man pretends he never commits any advices prohibited by the word of God, and then that were a rare charm to render him impeccable, or that is the means of consecrating every sin of his.

To IMPEDE. v. a. [impedio, Lat.] To hinder; to let; to obstruct.

All the forces are mustered to impede his passage.

The way is open, and no stop to force
The stars return, or to impede their course.

IMPEDIMENT. n. s. [impedimentum, Lat.] Hinderance; let; obstruction; opposi- tion.

The minds of beasts grudge not at their bodies comfort, nor are their senses letted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience.

What impediments there are to hinder it, and which were the speediest way to remove them.

The life is led most happily wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let.

But for my tears,
The most impediments unto my speech,
I had forefall'd this dear and deep rebuke.

May I never
To this good purpose, that so fairly shews,
Dream of impediment.

They bring one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech.

Fear is the greatest impediment to martyrdom;
and he that is overcome by little arguments of pain, will hardly content to lose his life with torments.

Free from th' impediments of light and noise,
Man, thus retir'd, his nobler thoughts employs.

To IMPEL. v. a. [impello, Lat.] To drive on toward a point; to urge for- ward; to press on.

So Mirah's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide.
The surge impell'd me on a craggy coast.

Attend thy voyage, and impel thy sails.
A mightier power the strong direction sends,
And several men impels to several ends;

This drives them constant to a certain coast.

IMPELLENT. n. s. [impellens, Lat.] An impulsive power; a power that drives forward.

How such a variety of motions should be regularly managed, in such a wilderness of passages, by mere blind impellents and material conveyances, I have not the least conjecture.

To IMPEND. v. n. [impendo, Latin.]

1. To hang over.

Destitution sure o'er all your heads impends;
Ulysses comes, and death his steps attends.

2. To be at hand; to press nearly. It is used in an ill sense.

It expresses our deep sorrow for our past sins,
and our lively sense of God's impending wrath.

No story I unfold of publick woes,
Nor bear advices of impending foes.

IMPENDENT. adj. [impendens, Lat.] Im- minent; hanging over; pressing closely. In an ill sense.

If the evil feared or impending be a greater sensible evil than the good, it over-rides the appetite to avert it.

Dreadful in arms, on Landen's glorious plain Place Ormond's duke; impending in the air
Let his keen sabre, comet-like, appear.

IMPENDECE. n. s. [from impendens.] The state of hanging over; near ap- proach.

Good sometimes is not safe to be attempted,
by reason of the impendence of a greater sensible
evil.

IMPENETRABILITY. n. s. [impenetrabilité, Fr. from impenetrable.]

1. Quality of not being pierceable, or permeable.

All bodies, so far as experience reaches, are either hard, or may be hardened; and we have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception.

2. Insusceptibility of intellectual impres- sion.

IMPENETRABLE. adj. [impenetrable, Fr. impenetrabilis, Lat.]

1. Not to be pierced; not to be entered by any external force.

With hard'ning cold, and forming heat,
The cyclops did their strokes repeat,
Before th' impenetrable shield was wrought.

2. Impervious; not admitting entrance.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Impenetrable to the blast or sun.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross: things, thus offered to the mind, carry the show of nothing but difficulty in them,
and are thought to be wrapped up in impenetrable obscurity.

3. Not to be taught; not to be informed.

4. Not to be affected; not to be moved.

It is the most impenetrable cut
That ever kept with men.

Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers.

Some will never believe a proposition in divinity, if any thing can be said against it: they will be credulous in all affairs of life, but impenetrable by a sermon of the gospel.

IMPENETRABLY. adv. [from impenetra- ble.] With hardness to a degree inca- pable of impression.

Blunt the scute, and fit it for a skull
Of solid proof, impenetrably dull.

IMPENITENCE. } n. s. [impenitence, Fr. IMPENITENCY. } in and penitence.] Ob- duracy; want of remorse for crimes; final disregard of God's threatenings or mercy.

Where one man ever comes to repent, a thousand end their days in final impenitence.

Before the revelation of the gospel the wickedness and impenitency of the heathens was a much more excusable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life.

He will advance from one degree of wickedness and impenitence to another, 'till at last he becomes hardened without remorse.

IMPENITENT. adj. [impenitent, Fr. in and penitent.] Finally negligent of the duty of repentance; obdurate.

Our Lord in anger hath granted some impenitent men's request; as, on the other side, the apostle's suit he hath of favour and mercy not granted.

They dy'd
Impenitent, and left a race behind
Like to themselves.

When the reward of penitents, and punishment of impenitents, is once assented to as true,
'tis impossible but the mind of man should wish for the one, and have dislikes to the other.

IMPENITENTLY. adv. [from impenitent.] Obdurately; without repentance.

The condition required of us is a constellation of all the gospel graces, every one of them rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully, and impenitently lived and did in.

What crowds of these impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets!

IMPEVIOUS. adj. [in and penna, Lat.] Wanting wings. This word is conve- nient, but, I think, not used.

IMP

It is generally received an earwig hath no wings, and is reckoned amongst imperfect insects; but he that shall, with a needle, put aside the short and sheathy cases on their back, may draw forth two wings, larger than in many flies. Brown.

The middle action, which produceth imperfect bodies, is fitly called, by some of the ancients, inquinatio or incoaction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of minerals, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks. Brown.

Diverse things we agree to be knowledge, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle.

A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a greater withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an intire wasting of the body, excluding all cure. Hazey on Consumptions.

The still-born sounds upon the palate hung, And dy'd imperfect on the failing tongue. Dryden.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men. Locke.

2. Frail; not completely good: as, our best worship is imperfect.

IMPERFECTION. n. f. [imperfectio, Fr. from imperfect.] Defect; failure; fault, whether physical or moral; whether of persons or things.

Laws, as all other things human, are many times full of imperfectio; and that which is supposed behoveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hosker.

The duke had taken to wife Anne Stanhope, a woman for many *imperfectio*s intolerable; but for pride monstrous. Hayward.

*Imperfectio*s would not be half so much taken notice of, if vanity did not make proclamation of them. L'Estrange.

The world is more apt to censure than applaud, and himself fuller of *imperfectio*s than virtues. Addison's Spectator.

These are rather to be imputed to the simplicity of the age than to any imperfectio in that divine poet. Addison.

IMPERFECTLY. adv. [from imperfect.] Not completely; not fully; not without failure.

Should sinking nations summon you away, Maria's love might justify your stay: Imperfectly the many vows are paid, Which for your safety to the gods were made. Stepney.

Those would hardly understand language or reason to any tolerable degree; but only a little and imperfectly about things familiar. Locke.

soul of man, we are not to omit those characters of majesty that God imprinted upon the body.
South.

She amidst his spacious meadows flows;
Inclines her urn upon his fatten'd lands,
And feeds his num'rous herds imprint her sands.
Prior.

2. To stamp words upon paper by the use of types.

3. To fix on the mind or memory.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages, amongst compliments, which is of singular use. Bacon.

We have all those ideas in our understandings which we can make the objects of our thoughts, without the help of those sensible qualities which first imprinted them. Locke.

Retraction is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas, which, after imprinting, have disappeared. Locke.

By familiar acquaintance he has got the ideas of those two different things distinctly imprinted
on his mind. Locke.

4. TO IMPRINT is less proper.

When we set before our eyes a round globe,
the idea imprinted in our mind is of a flat circle, variously shadowed. Locke.

TO IMPRISON. v. a. [emprisonner, Fr.
in and prison] To shut up; to confine;

to keep from liberty; to restrain in place.

He imprison'd was in chains remediless;
For that Hippolytus' rent corse he did redress.
Spenser.

Now we are in the street, he first of all,
Imprudently proud, creeps to the wall;
And so imprison'd and hemm'd in by me,
Sells for a little false liberty. Dunne.

Try to imprison the resistless wind;
So swift is guilt, so hard to be confin'd. Dryden.

If a man imprisons himself in his closet, and employs reason to find out the nature of the corporal world, without experiments, he will frame a scheme of chimeras. Watts.

It is not improbable, that all the virtual heat in the juices of vegetables, metals, and minerals, may be owing to the action of the imprisoned rays.
Chrys.

IMPRISONMENT. n. f. [emprisonnement,

3. Hostile impression.

Like two great rocks against the raging tide, Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide, Sustain th' impulse, and receive the war. Prior

IMPULSION. n. f. [impulsion, French; impulsus, Latin.]

1. The agency of body in motion upon body.

The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without sound; for that sound that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon's Natural History

To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon's Natural History

2. Influence operating upon the mind.

But thou didst plead Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st Find some occasion to infect our foes. Milton

IMPULSIVE. adj. [impulsif, French; from impulse.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.

Nature and duty bind him to obedience: But those being placed in a lower sphere, His fierce ambition, like the highest mover, His hurried with a strong impulsive motion Against their proper course. Dunham's Sophy

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free grace. South

Poor men! poor papers! we and they Do some impulsive force obey, And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior

IMPUNITY. n. f. [impunité, French; impunitas, Latin.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.

In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Darwin

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never believe, that there is a crime where they see no penalty. Addison

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their ill-gotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Atterbury

IMPURE. adj. [impur, French; impurus, Latin.]

1. Defiled with guilt; unholy; of men.

I have formerly said that I could distinguish your writings from those of any others: 'tis now time to clear myself from any imputation of self-conceit on that subject. Dryden

2. Sometimes of good.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their matter. Shaksp.

3. Censure; reproach.

Whatsoever happens they also the least feel that scourge of vulgar imputation, which notwithstanding they deserve. Hooker

Lerous be careful to guard ourselves against these groundless imputations of our enemies, and to rise above them. Johnson

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Swift

4. Hint; slight notice.

Anthony is a good man. —Have you heard any imputation to the contrary? —No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shaksp.

IMPUTATIVE. adj. [from impute.] That may impute.

TO IMPUTE. v. a. [imputer, French; imputo, Latin.]

1. To charge upon; to attribute: generally ill; sometimes good.

It was imputed to him for righteousness. Rom. Men in their innovations should follow the example of time, which innovateth but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived; for otherwise whatsoever is new and unlooked for, ever mends some, and impairs others; and he that is hapless takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputeth it to the author. Bacon's Essays

I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy those who imputed it to folly. Temple

Impute your dangers to our ignorance. Dryd.

This obscurity cannot be imputed to want of language in so great a master of stile. Locke

I have read a book imputed to lord Balthus, called a dissertation on parties. Swift

2. To reckon to one what does not properly belong to him.

Thy merit

Imputed shall absolve them who renounce

Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds. Milton

IMPUTER. n. f. [from impute.] He that imputes.

IN. prep. [in, Latin.]

1. Noting the place where any thing is present; not without.

In school of love are all things taught we see; There learn'd this maid of arms the useful guise. Fairfax

Is this place here not sufficient strong To guard us in? Daniel's Civil War

2. Noting the state or thing present at any time.

The other is only by error and misapprehension named the ordinance of Jesus Christ: no one proof is yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed. Hooker

Like one of two contending in a prize,

That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes. Shaksp.

Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate,

With many more confederates, are in arms. Shaksp.

Danger before, and in, and after the act,

You needs must grant is great. Daniel

However it be in knowledge, I may truly say it is of no use at all in probabilities; for the assent there, being to be determined by the preponderancy, after a due weighing of all the proofs on both sides, nothing is so unfit to assist the mind in that as syllogism. Locke

God hath made our eternal and temporal interests, in most cases, very consistent. Smalridge

None was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they had most abused. Dunclad

3. Noting the time.

When we would consider sternity a parte ante, what do we but, beginning from ourselves and the present time we are in, repeat in our minds the ideas of years or ages past? Locke

4. Noting power.

To feed men's souls, quoth he, is not in man. Hobbes's Leviathan

5. Noting proportion.

Let utury in general be reduced to five in the hundred, and let that rate be proclaimed to be free and current. Bacon

I cannot but lament the common course, which, at least, nine in ten of those who enter into the ministry are obliged to enter. Swift

6. According to.

In all likelihood I brought all my limbs out of the bed, which, 'tis probable, he has not done off the breach. Caesar

7. Concerning.

I only consider what he, who is allowed to have carried this argument farthest, has said on it. Locke

8. For the sake. A solemn phrase.

Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat does this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great? Shakespeare.
To the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Bann'd him our city. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Now, in the name of honour, sir, I beg you
That I may see your father's death reveng'd.
Dryden.

9. Noting cause.

King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shak.

10. In that. Because.

Some things they do in that they are men; in that they are wise men, and chaste men, some things; some things in that they are men
imitted, and blinded with error. Hosker.
He cannot brook such disgrace well, as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search. Shakespeare.

11. In as much. Since; seeing that.

Those things are done voluntarily by us, which other creatures do naturally, in as much as we might stay our doing of them if we would.
Hosker.

In. adv.

1. Within some place; not out.

How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable prison; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of follishness as to play in and out, and show tricks with words, the sacred bonds which the conscience of man can be loosed with. Savah
I fear me, you'll be in 'till then. Shakespeare

2. Engaged to any affair.

We know the world can come; 'tis thought upon:

We cannot shift being in, we must go on. Dan.
These pragmatists flies value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing. L'Estrange.

3. Placed in some state.

Poor rogues talk of court news,
Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out.
Shakespeare

Must never put him then declaim at gin,
Unless, good man, he has been fairly in? Pope

4. Noting immediate entrance.

Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table;
serve in the meat; and we will come in to dinner.
Shakespeare.

He's too big to go in there; what shall I do?
—Let me see't! I'll in, I'll in: follow your friend's advice.
I'll in. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

5. Into any place.

Next in the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in.
Dryden

Is it not more eligible to come in with a smoothing gale, than to be tossed at sea with a storm?
Carter

In the said cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve, larger than could be introduced in at those holes. Westward.

6. Close; home.

The posture of left-handed fencers is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tartar.

7. In has commonly in composition a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin: so, active denotes that which acts, inactive that which does not act. In before r is changed into r; as irregular: before l into l; as illusive: and into m before some other consonants; as improbable.INABILITY. n. f. [in and ability.] Impulsance; impotence; want of power.

If no natural nor casual instincts cross their desires, they always delighting to more themselves with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and through experience the more wisdom. Hosker.

Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended; and what plea can we offer to divine justice to prevent condemnation? Rogers.

INABSTINENCE. n. f. [in and abstinence.]
Intemperance; want of power to abstain; prevalence of appetite.

Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve Shall bring on man. Milton.

INACCESSIBLE. adj. [inaccessible, French;
in and accessible.] Not to be reached;
not to be approached.

Whatever you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time.
Shakespeare.

Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower form, are inaccessible to us. Hale.

There shall we see the ends and uses of these things, which here were either too subtle for us to penetrate, or too remote and inaccessible for us to come to any distant view of. Ray.

This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessible; and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy
her. Dryden.

INARABLE. adj. [in and ar, Latin.] Not capable of tillage.

DiB.

To INARCH. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length; after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmynes, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding.

Miller.

INARTICULATE. adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness, like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters.

Then unreasonable severity was not the least incentive, that blew up into those flames the sparks of discontent.

King Charles.

2. That which provokes; that which encourages; incitement; motive; encouragement; spur. It is used of that which incites, whether to good or ill with to.

Congruity of opinions, as our natural constitution, is one great incentive to their reception.

Glanville's Scaphs.

Even the wisdom of God hath not suggested more pressing motives, more powerful incentives to charity, than these, that we shall be judged by it at the last dreadful day.

Atterbury.

It encourages speculative persons, with all the incentives of place, profit, and preferment.

Addison's Freeholder.

INCENTIVE. adj. Inciting; encouraging: with to.

Competency is the most incentive to industry: too little makes men desperate, and too much careless.

Decay of Piety.

INCEPTION. n. f. [inceptio, Latin.] Beginning.

The inception of putrefaction hath in it a maturation.

Bacon.

INCEPTIVE. adj. [inceptivus, Lat.] Noting beginning.

An inceptive and desitive proposition, as, the fogs vanish as the sun rises; but the fogs have not yet begun to vanish, therefore the sun is not yet risen.

Locke.

INCEPTOR. n. f. [Latin.] A beginner; one who is in his rudiments.

INCESSANT. adj. [in and cessans, Latin.] Unceasing; unintermitted; continual; uninterrupted.

Raging wind blows up incessant show'rs.

Shalfp.

The incessant weeping of my wife,
Fur'd me to sick delays. Shakspeare.

If, by pray'r
Incessant, I could hope to change the will
Of him who all things can, I would not cease
To weary him with my assiduous cries. Milton.

In form, a herald of the king she flies
From peer to peer, and thus incessant cries. Pope.

INCESSANTLY. adv. [from incessant.]
Without intermission; continually.

Both his hands most filthily feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly. Fairy Queen.

Who reads
Incessantly, and to his reading brings not
A spirit and judgment equal or superior. Milton.

The Christians, who carried their religion through so many persecutions, were incessantly comforting one another with the example and history of our Saviour and his apostles. Addison.

INCEST. n. f. [inceste, French; incestum, Latin.] Unnatural and criminal conjunction of persons within degrees prohibited.

Is't not a kind of incest to take life
From thine own sister's thame? Shakspeare.

He who entered in the first act, a young man like Pericles, prince of Tyre, must not be in danger in the fifth act of committing incest with his daughter. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

INCESTUOUS. adj. [incestueux, French.] Guilty of incest; guilty of unnatural cohabitation.

Hide me, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjure, thou simulator of virtue,
Thou art incestuous. Shakspeare's King Lear.

We may easily guess with what impatience the world would have heard an incestuous Heron discounting of chastity. South.

Ere you reach to this incestuous love,
You must divine and human rights remove. Dryden.

INCESTUOUSLY. adv. [from incestuous.]
With unnatural love.

Macneus and Canace, son and daughter to Atolus, god of the winds, loved each other in-cestuously. Dryden.

INCH. n. f. [ince, Saxon; uncia, Lat.]

1. A measure of length supposed equal to three grains of barley laid end to end; the twelfth part of a foot.

A foot is the sixth part of the stature of man, a span one eighth of it, and a thumb's breadth or inch one seventy-second. Holder on Time.

The sun should never miss, in all his race,
Of time one minute, or one inch of space. Blackm.

2. A proverbial name for a small quantity.

The plebeians have got your fellow tribune;
They'll give him death by inches. Shakspeare.

As in tailing, so in length is man,
Contracted to an inch, who was a span. Denne.

Is it so desirable a condition to consume by inches, and lose one's blood by drops. Collier.

The commons were growing by degrees into power and property, gaining ground upon the patricians inch by inch. Swift.

3. A nice point of time.

Belshazz, I think, we watch'd you at an inch. Shakspeare.

To INCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive by inches.

Valiant they say, but very popular;
He gets too far into the soldiers' graces,
And inches out my matter. Dryden's Glencoe.

2. To deal out by inches; to give sparingly. Ainsworth.

To INCH. v. n. To advance or retire a little at a time.

a deer. Ainsworth.

INCHMEAL. n. f. [inch and meal.] A piece of an inch long.

All th' infections that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall, and make him
By inchmeal a disease! Shakspeare's Tempest.

To INCHOATE. v. a. [inchoo, Latin.]
To begin; to commence.

It is neither a substance perfect, nor a substance inchoate, or in the way of perfection. Rudolph.

INCHOATION. n. f. [inchoatus, Latin.]
Inception; beginning.

It discerneth of four kinds of causes; forces, frauds, crimes various of felonate, and the inchoations or middle acts towards crimes capital, not actually perpetrated. Bacon.

The setting on foot some of those arts in those parts would be looked upon as the first inchoation of them, which yet would be but their reviving.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

INCHOATIVE. adj. [inchoative, French; inchoativus, Latin.] Inceptive; noting inchoation or beginning.

To INCI'DE. v. a. [from incido, to cut,
Latin.]

Medicines are said to incide which consist of pointed and sharp particles; as acids, and most salts, by which the particles of other bodies are divided from one another; thus expectorating medicines are said to incide or cut the phlegm.
Quimper.

The menses are promoted by all saponaceous substances, which incide the mucus in the first passages. Arbutnot.

INCIDENCE. n. f. [incido, to fall, Lat.]
INCIDENCY. n. f. [incidence, French.]

1. The direction with which one body strikes upon another, and the angle made by that line, and the plane struck upon, is called the angle of incidence.
In the occurrences of two moving bodies, their incidence is said to be perpendicular or oblique, as their directions or lines of motion make a straight line or an oblique angle at the point of contact. Quincy.

In mirrors there is the like angle of incidence,
from the object of the glass, and from the glass to the eye. Bacon.

He enjoys his happy state most when he communicates it, and receives a more vigorous joy from the reflection than from the direct incidence of his happiness. Norris.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed. Newton's Opticks.

The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays. Newton.

2. [incidens, Latin.] Accident; hap;
casualty.

What incidency thou do'st guess of harm declare, Shakspeare.

INCIDENT. adj. [incident, Fr. incidents,
Latin.]

1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidentally; issuing in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise men's rare incident necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered. Waller.

I would note in children not only their artlesslate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incident occasions. Hutton.

In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which make another proposition: as, every man, who is pious, shall be saved: Julius, whose surname was Cæsar, overcame Pompey: bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition. Watts.

2. Happening; apt to happen.

Constancy is such a firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be guilty of. South.

INCIDENT. n. f. [incident, French; from the adjective.] Something happening beside the main design; casualty.

His wisdom will fall into it as an incident to the point of lawfulness. Bacon's Holy War.

No person, no incident in the play, but must be of use to carry on the main design. Dryden.

INCIDENTAL. adj. Incident; casual;
happening by chance; not intended;
not deliberate; not necessary to the chief purpose.

The satisfaction you received from those inci- idental discourses which we have wandered into.

By some religious duties scarce appear to be regarded at all, and by others only as an incidental business, to be done when they have nothing else to do. Rogers.

INCIDENTALLY. adv. [from incidental.]
Beside the main design; occasionally.

These general rules are but occasionally and inci- dentally mentioned in scripture, rather to manifest unto us a former, than to lay upon us a new obligation. Saunderson.

I treat either purposely or incidentally of colours. Boyle.

INCIDENTLY. adv. [from incident.] Occasionally; by the by; by the way.

It was incidently moved amongst the judges what should be done for the king himself, who was attainted; but resolved that the crown takes away defects. Bacon's Henry VII.

To INCINERATE. v. a. [in and cineres,
Latin.] To burn to ashes.

By baking, without melting, the heat indurath, then maketh fragile; lastly, it doth inci- nerate and calcinate. Bacon.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly broken and inci- nerate. Bacon.

These dregs are soon incinerated and calcined into such salts which produce coughs. Hartve.

INCINERATION. n. f. [incineration, Fr.
from incinerate.] The act of burning any thing to ashes.

I observed in the first salt of urine, brought by deposition to be very white, a taste not unlike common salt, and very differing from the caustick lividate taste of other salts made by inci- neration. Boyle.

INCIRCUMSPECTION. n. f. [in and circum- specification.] Want of caution; want of heed.

An unexpected way of delusion, whereby he more easily led away the incircumspection of those believers. Brown.

INCISED. adj. [inciser, French; incisus, Latin.] Cut; made by cutting; as,
an incised wound.

I thought the incised lips together. Westman.

INCISION. n. f. [incision, Fr. inciso, Lat.]

1. A cut; a wound made with a sharp instrument. Generally used for wounds made by a chirurgion.

Let us make incision for your love,
To prove whole blood is reddest, his or mine.

God help thee, shallow man: God make incision in thee, thou art raw.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower.

A small incision knife is more handy than a larger for opening the bag.

2. Division of viscosities by medicines.

Absterge is a scouring off, or incision of viscid humours, and making them fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as in nitrous water, which scoureth linen.

INCISIVE. adj. [incisif, Fr. from incisus, Lat.] Having the quality of cutting or dividing.

The colour of many corpuscles will cohere by being precipitated together, and be destroyed by the effusion of very piercing and incisive liquors.

INCISOR. n. f. [incisor, Latin.] Cutter; tooth in the forepart of the mouth.

INCISORY. adj. [incisoire, Fr.] Having the quality of cutting.

INCISURE. n. f. [incisura, Latin.] A cut; an aperture.

In some creatures it is wide, in some narrow, in some with a deep incisure up into the head, for the better eating and holding of prey, and comminuting of hard food.

INCITATION. n. f. [incitatio, Latin.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse; the act of inciting; the power of inciting.

Dr. Ridley defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition concurring unto contiguity, an union of one magnetical body unto another.

The multitude of objects do proportionably multiply both the possibilities and incitations.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity.

TO INCITE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.] To stir up; to push forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urge on.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in apprehension
Of what your reverence shall incite us to? Shaksp.
No blown ambition doth our arms incite;
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom.

Nature and common reason, in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude.

INCITEMENT. n. f. [from incite.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting cause.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way inclinable.

Harshness seems sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island.

If thou must reform the stubborn times,
From the long records of distant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage.

INCIVIL. adj. [incivil, French.] Unpolished. See UNCIVIL.

INCIVILITY. n. f. [incivilité, French; in and civility.]

1. Want of courtesy; rudeness.

He does offend against that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether true or not, which is the greatest incivility.

2. Act of rudeness. In this sense it has a plural.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, uncourteous jests, loud talking, and jeering which, in civil account, are called indecencies and incivilities.

INCLEMENCY. n. f. [inclemence, French; inclementia, Latin.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
In heav'n's inclemency some ease we find:
Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left.

INCLEMENT. adj. [in and clemens, Lat.]

Unmerciful; unpitiful; void of tenderness; harsh. It is used oftener of things than of men.

Teach us further by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail and snow.

I stand
Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land:
Propitious to my wants, a vast supply,
To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky.

INCLINABLE. adj. [inclinabilis, Latin.]

1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition: with to.
People are not always inclinable to the best.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable.

The gall and bitterness of certain men's writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured.

Desire,
Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye.

2. Having a tendency.

If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the last: but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally.

INCLINATION. n. f. [inclinatio, French; inclinatio, Latin.]

1. Tendency toward any point: with to.
The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter.

2. Natural aptness.
Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil to that way.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.
The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally alienated from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law?

4. Love; affection; regard. In this sense it admits for.

We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting.

5. Disposition of mind.
Report the features of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination.

6. The tendency of the magnetical needle to the east or west.

7. [In pharmacy.] The act by which a clear liquor is poured off from some feces or sediment by only sloping the vessel, which is also called decantation.

INCLINATORY. adj. [from incline.] Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

It that inclinatory virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline.

INCLINATORILY. adv. [from inclinatory.] Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from north and south.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatory, or somewhat equinoctially, that is, toward the eastern or western points, they discover some verities.

TO INCLINE. v. n. [inclinio, Latin; incliner, French.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend toward any part: with to or toward.
Her house inclined unto death, and her paths unto the dead.

Still to this place
My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes;
Hither my feet unbidden find their way.

2. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.
Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?
— He seems indifferent;
Or rather swaying more upon our part.

Their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech.

TO INCLINE. v. a.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.
The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumb'rous weight,
Our eye-lids.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the baron fate inclines the field.

A tow'ring structure to the palace join'd;
To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclined.

2. To turn toward any thing, as desirous or attentive.
Incline our hearts to keep this law.
You have not inclined your ear unto me.

But that from us might should ascend to hear
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-bless'd, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem, yet this will prayer.

3. To bend; to incurvate.
With due respect my body inclin'd,
As to some being of superior kind.

TO INCLIP. v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp; to enclose; to surround.
Whatever the ocean pales, or sky inclips,
Is thine, if thou wilt hat.

TO INCLOISTER. v. a. [in and cloister.] To shut up in a cloister.

TO INCLOUD. v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.
In their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, that we be inclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour.

TO INCLUDE. v. a. [include, Latin.]

We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting.

5. Disposition of mind.

Report the features of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination.

6. The tendency of the magnetical needle to the east or west.

7. [In pharmacy.] The act by which a clear liquor is poured off from some feces or sediment by only sloping the vessel, which is also called decantation.

INCLINATORY. adj. [from incline.] Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

It that inclinatory virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline.

INCLINATORILY. adv. [from inclinatory.] Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from north and south.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatory, or somewhat equinoctially, that is, toward the eastern or western points, they discover some verities.

TO INCLINE. v. n. [inclinio, Latin; incliner, French.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend toward any part: with to or toward.
Her house inclined unto death, and her paths unto the dead.

Still to this place
My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes;
Hither my feet unbidden find their way.

2. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.
Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?
— He seems indifferent;
Or rather swaying more upon our part.

Their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech.

TO INCLINE. v. a.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.
The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumb'rous weight,
Our eye-lids.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the baron fate inclines the field.

A tow'ring structure to the palace join'd;
To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclined.

2. To turn toward any thing, as desirous or attentive.
Incline our hearts to keep this law.
You have not inclined your ear unto me.

But that from us might should ascend to hear
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-bless'd, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem, yet this will prayer.

3. To bend; to incurvate.
With due respect my body inclin'd,
As to some being of superior kind.

TO INCLIP. v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp; to enclose; to surround.
Whatever the ocean pales, or sky inclips,
Is thine, if thou wilt hat.

TO INCLOISTER. v. a. [in and cloister.] To shut up in a cloister.

TO INCLOUD. v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.
In their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, that we be inclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour.

TO INCLUDE. v. a. [include, Latin.]

1. To enclose; to shut in: as, the shell includes a pearl.
2. To comprise; to comprehend.

This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one intire leaf.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included.

INCLUSIVE. adj. [includere, French.]

1. Enclosing; encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to fear me to the brain!

2. Comprehended in the sum or number: as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,
From courts inclusive down to cells.

INCLUSIVELY. adv. [from inclusive.]
The thing mentioned reckoned into the account. See INCLUSIVE.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively.

All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inclusively; and is differentiated partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating.

INCOAGULABLE. adj. [in and coagulable.]
Incapable of concretion.

INCOEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and coexistence.]
The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence. An unusual word.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on.

INCOGNITO. adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Latin.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog,
Depend upon it, he'll remain incog.

INCOGITANCY. n. f. [incoGITANTIA, Lat.]
Want of thought.

One man's fancies are laws to successors, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitant presumption.

Next to the stupid and merely vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration.

INCOGITATIVE. adj. [in and cogitative.]
Wanting the power of thought.

Partly material beings, as clippings of our beads, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings.

INCOGNITO. adv. [incoGNITUS, Latin.]
In a state of concealment.

Since gods came down incognito.

INCOHERENCE. n. f. [in and coherence.]
INCOHERENCY. n. f. [in and coherence.]

1. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaster be beaten into an impenetrable powder, when poured out it will emit steam liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small,

that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass.

2. Want of connexion; incongruity; inconsequence of argument; want of dependance of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the arguments better than syllogisms.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handsomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason.

INCOHERENT. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Wanting cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as pervious as those of marl or gravel.

2. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependance of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being!

INCOHERENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.]
Inconsistently; inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylocus is the imitation of a person confounded with tears, speaking irrationally and incoherently.

INCOLUMITY. n. f. [incolumitas, Latin.]
Safety; security. Little in use.

The parliament is necessary to assert and preserve the national rights of a people, with the incolumity and welfare of a country.

INCOMBUSTIBILITY. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Appennines is remarkable for its flaming quality, and the amianthus for its incombustibility.

INCOMBUSTIBLE. adj. [incombustible, Fr. in and combustible.] Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire.

INCOME. n. f. [in and come.] Revenue; produce of any thing.

Thou who repinest at the plenty of thy neighbour, and the greatness of his income, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this.

No fields afford
So large an income to the village lord.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income but what arises from its trade: the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture.

Notwithstanding the large income annexed to some few of her preferments, this church hath in the whole little to subsist on.

INCOMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from incommensurable.] The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

INCOMMENSURABLE. adj. [French; from in, con, and mensurabilis, Latin.] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature.

INCOMMENSURATE. adj. [in, con, and mensura, Latin.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrate, which, to our apprehension, are incommensurate, are yet commensurate to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; to we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incommensurate to one another, for civil use, measuring the greater by the less.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any greater space of time may be said to comprehend a less, though the less space be incommensurate to the greater.

INCOMMUNICABLE. n. f. [incommunicabilis, Latin.] To be incommunicable; to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

A goat, planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommode ye, says he, I'll remove.

Although they sometimes molest and incommode the inhabitants, yet the agent, whereby both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensable necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it.

INCOMMODOUS. adj. [incommodus, Lat.]
Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience does ever follow it? may by some accident be incommodious to a few.

1. Introduction; entrance; anciently preface.

These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosperous hope. Shak.

2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelations; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts' Logic.

The inquisition by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon.

Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration: conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.

Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general: and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton's Opticks.

He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.

3. The act or state of taking possession of an ecclesiastical living.

INDUCTIVE. adj. [from induct.]

1. Leading; persuasive: with to.

A brutish vice,

Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milton.

2. Capable to infer or produce.

Abatements may take away infallible conclusiveness in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Proceeding not by demonstration, but induction.

TO INDUE. v. a. [induo, Latin.]

1. To invest; to clothe.

One first matter all,

Indued with various forms. Milton.

2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with endow or indue, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence.

The angel, by whom God indued the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters. Huaker.

His pow'rs, with dreadful strength indu'd.

Chapman.

TO INDULGE. v. a. [indulgeo, Lat.]

1. To encourage by compliance.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep;
Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryd.

2. To fondle; to favour; to gratify with concession; to foster. If the matter of indulgence be a single thing, it has quit before it; if it be a habit, it has in: as, he indulged himself with a draught of wine; and, he indulged himself in shameful drunkenness.

A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. Lact.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Locke.

Bacon.

3. To grant not of right but favour.

Ancient privileges, indulged by former kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors. Taylor.

The virgin entering bright, indulg'd the day
To the brown cave, and brush'd the dream away. Dryden.

But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryden's Juvenal.

My friend, indulge one labour more,
And seek Atreides. Pope's Odyssey.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night! Pope.

TO INDULGE. v. n. [a latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence: with to.

He must, by indulging to one sort of reprovable discourse himself, defeat his endeavours against the rest. Gervase of the Tongue.

INDULGENCE. } n. f. [indulgence, French;
INDULGENCY. } from indulge.]

1. Fondness; fond kindness.

Restrain she will not brook;
And lest to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milton.

The glories of our life,
Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,
Expect the warm indulgency of heaven. Dryden.

2. Forbearance; tenderness: opposite to rigour.

They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less. Hammond.

In known images of life, I guess
The labour greater, as th' indulgence less. Pope.

3. Favour granted; liberality.

If all these gracious indulgencies are without any effect on us, we must perish in our own folly. Rogers.

4. Grant of the church of Rome, not defined by themselves.

Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sin,
I'll canvass thee. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.

In purgatory, indulgences, and supererogation, the assertors seem to be unanimous in nothing but profit. Decay of Piety.

Leo x. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences. Atterbury.

INDULGENT. adj. [indulgent, French; indulgens, Latin.]

1. Kind; gentle; liberal.

God has done all for us that the most indulgent Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers.

2. Mild; favourable.

Hereafter such in thy behalf shall be
Th' indulgent censure of posterity. Waller.

3. Gratifying; favouring; giving way to: with of.

The feeble old, indulgent of their ease. Dryd.

INDULGENTLY. adv. [from indulgent.]

Without severity; without censure;
Without self-reproach; with indulgence.

He that not only commits some act of sin, but lives indulgently in it, is never to be counted a regenerate man. Hammond.

INDUL'T. } n. f. [Italian and French.]

INDUL'TO. } Privilege or exemption.

TO INDURATE. v. n. [induro, Latin.]

To grow hard; to harden.

Stones within the earth at first are but rude earth or clay; and so minerals come at first of juices concrete, which afterwards indurate. Bacon's Natural History.

That plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water without approachment of air, we have experiments in corallines. Brown.

TO INDURATE. v. a.

1. To make hard.

A contracted indurated bladder is a circumstance sometimes attending on the stone, and indeed an extraordinary dangerous one. Sharp.

2. To harden the mind; to scar the conscience.

INDURATION. n. f. [from indurate.]

1. The state of growing hard.

This is a notable instance of condensation and induration, by burial under earth, in caves, for a long time. Bacon.

2. The act of hardening.

3. Obduracy; hardness of heart.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.

INDUSTRIOUS. adj. [industrious, Fr. industrius, Latin.]

1. Diligent; laborious; assiduous: opposite to slothful.

Frugal and industrious men are commonly friendly to the established government. Temple.

2. Laborious to a particular end: opposite to remiss.

He himself, being excellently learned, and industrious to seek out the truth of all things concerning the original of his own people, hath set down the testimony of the ancients truly. Spenser.

Let our just censures
Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership. Shakespeare.

His thoughts were low:
To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Timorous and slothful. Milton.

3. Designed; done for the purpose.

The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, draw the tendons of the third joints through. More.

Observe carefully all the events which happen either by an occasional concurrence of various causes, or by the industrious application of knowing men. Watts on the Mind.

INDUSTRIOUSLY. adv. [from industrious.]

1. With habitual diligence; not idly.

2. Diligently; laboriously; assiduously.

Great Britain was never before united under one king, notwithstanding that the uniting had been industriously attempted both by war and peace. Bacon.

3. For the set purpose; with design.

Some friends to vice industriously defend These innocent diversions, and pretend
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden's Juvenal.

I am not under the necessity of declaring myself, and I industriously conceal my name, which wholly exempts me from any hopes and fears. Swift.

INDUSTRY. n. f. [industrie, Fr. industria, Lat.] Diligence; assiduity; habitual or actual laboriousness.

The sweat of industry would dry and die,
But for the end it works to. Shakespeare.

See the laborious bee
For little drops of honey fly,
And there with humble tweets content her industry. Cowley.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry; that we might not live like idle loiterers. More.

TO INEBRIATE. v. a. [inebrio, Lat.]

To intoxicate; to make drunk.

Wine sugared inebriates less than wine pure: sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriates more than wine of itself. Bacon.

Fish entering far inland meeting with the fresh water, as if inebriated, turn up their bellies and are taken. Savigny.

TO INEBRIATE. v. n. To grow drunk; to be intoxicated.

At Constantinople, fish, that come from the Euxine sea into the fresh water, do inebriate and turn up their bellies, so as you may take them with your hand. Bacon.

INEBRIATION. n. f. [from inebriate.] Drunkenness; intoxication.

That cornelians and bloodstones may be of virtue, experience will make us grant; but not that an amethyst prevents inebriation. Brown.

INEFFABILITY. n. f. [from ineffable.] Unspeakeableness.

INEFFABLE. adj. [ineffable, Fr. ineffabilis, Lat.] Unspeakable; unutterable; not to be expressed. It is used almost always in a good sense.

To whom the Sun, with calm aspect, and clear, Lightning divine, ineffable, serene! Milton.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitted conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. South.

INEFFABLY. adv. [from ineffable.] In a manner not to be expressed.

He all his father full express'd, Ineffably into his face receiv'd. Milton.

INEFFECTIVE. adj. [ineffectif, Fr. in and effective.] That can produce no effect; unactive; inefficient; useless.

At the body, without blood, is a dead and lifeless trunk; so is the word of God, without the spirit, a dead and ineffective letter. Taylor.

He that assures himself he never errs, will always err; and his presumptions will render all attempts to inform him ineffective. Glanville.

INEFFECTUAL. adj. [in and effectual.] Unable to produce its proper effect; weak; wanting power.

The publick reading of the Apocrypha they condemn as a thing ineffectual unto evil: the bare reading even of scriptures themselves they dislike, as a thing ineffectual to do good. Hooker.

The death of Patroclus, joined to the offer of Agamemnon, which of itself had proved ineffectual. Pope.

INEFFECTUALLY. adv. [from ineffectual.] Without effect.

INEFFECTUALNESS. n. f. [from ineffectual.] Inefficacy; want of power to perform the proper effect.

St. James speaks of the ineffectualness of some men's devotion, Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss. Waker.

INEFFECTUOUS. adj. [ineffectue, Fr. in and efficace, Lat.] Unable to produce effects; weak; feeble. Ineffectual rather denotes an actual failure; and ineffectuous, an habitual impotence to any effect.

Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and, by frequent use, misapply and render ineffectuous this useful remedy? Locke.

INEFFICACY. n. f. [in and efficacia, Lat.] Want of power; want of effect.

INELEGANCE. n. f. [from inelegant.] INELEGANCY. s. Absence of beauty; want of elegance.

INELEGANT. adj. [inelegant, Lat.]

1. Not becoming; not beautiful: opposite to elegant.

What order, so contriv'd as not to mix Tastes, not well join'd, inelegant, but bring Taste after taste, upheld with kindest change. Milton.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, which is here reputed to inelegant and unbecoming, is indeed extremely charming and agreeable. Woodward.

2. Wanting ornament of language.

Modern critics, having never read Homer but in low and inelegant translations, impute the meanness of the translation to the poet. Brown.

INELOQUENT. adj. [in and eloquens, Lat.] Not persuasive; not oratorical: opposite to eloquent.

INEPT. adj. [ineptus, Lat.]

1. Trifling; foolish.

The works of nature, being neither useless nor inept, must be guided by some principle of knowledge. More.

After their various unsuccessful ways, Then fruitless labour, and inept essays, No cause of their appearances they'll find, But power exerted by th' eternal mind. Blackmore.

2. Unfit for any purpose; useless.

When the upper and vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile matter, such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

INEPTLY. adv. [ineptè, Lat.] Triflingly; foolishly; unftly.

None of them are made foolishly or ineptly. More.

All things were at first disposed by an omniscient intellect, that cannot contrive ineptly. Glanville.

INEPTITUDE. n. f. [from ineptus, Lat.] Unfitness.

The grating and rubbing of the axes against the sockets, wherein they are placed, will cause some ineptitude or resistency to the rotation of the cylinder. Wilkins.

An omnipotent agent works infallibly and irresistibly, no ineptitude or stubbornness of the matter being ever able to hinder him. Ray.

There is an ineptitude to motion from too great laxity, and ineptitude to motion from too great tension. Abraham.

INEQUALITY. n. f. [inegalité, Fr. from inequalitas, and inequalis Lat.]

1. Difference of comparative quantity.

There is so great an inequality in the length of our legs and arms, as makes it impossible for us to walk on all four. Ray.

2. Unevenness; interchange of higher and lower parts.

The country is cut into so many hills and inequalities as renders it defensible. Addison.

The glass seemed well wrought; yet when it was quicksilvered, the reflexion discovered innumerable inequalities all over the glass. Newton.

If there were no inequalities in the surface of the earth, nor in the seasons of the year, we should lose a considerable share of the vegetable kingdom. Bentley.

3. Disproportion to any office or purpose; state of not being adequate; inadequateness.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he proposed in the expectation. South.

4. Change of state; unlikeness of a thing to itself; difference of temper or quality.

In some places, by the nature of the earth, and by the situation of woods and hills, the air is more unequal than in others; and inequality of air is ever an enemy to health. Bacon.

5. Difference of rank or station.

It is small inequality between man and man make in them made by a commendable virtue, who respecting superiors as superiors, can neither speak nor stand before them without fear. Hooker.

INERRABILITY. n. f. [from inerrable.] Exemption from error; infallibility.

I cannot allow their wisdom such a completeness, and inerrability as to exclude myself from judging. King Charles.

INERRABLE. adj. [in and err.] Exempt from error.

We have conviction from reason, or decisions from the inerrable and requisite conditions of sense. Brown.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond.

INERRABLENESS. n. f. [from inerrable.] Exemption from error.

Infallibility and inerrableness is assumed and enclosed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond.

INERRABLY. adv. [from inerrable.] With security from error; infallibly.

INERRINGLY. adv. [in and erring.] Without error; without mistake; without deviation.

That divers limners at a distance, without copy, should draw the same picture, is more conceivable, than that matter should frame itself to inerringly according to the idea of its kind. Glanville.

INERT. adj. [iners, Latin.] Dull; sluggish; motionless.

Body alone, inert and brute, you'll find; The cause of all things is by you assign'd. Blackmore.

Informer of the planetary train! Without whose quickening glance their cumb'rous orbs

Were brute unlively mass, inert and dead. Thomson.

INERTLY. adv. [from inert.] Sluggishly; dully.

Ye powers, Suspend a while your force inertly strong. Daniel.

INESCATION. n. f. [in and esco, Latin.] The act of baiting.

INESTIMABLE. adj. [inestimable, French; inestimabilis, Latin.] Too valuable to be rated; transcending all price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks, A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon; Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl, Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels. Shakespeare.

The pope thereupon took advantage, abusing the simplicity of the king, to suck out inestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of both the clergy and temporality. Abbott.

There we shall see a sight worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, of whom the scripture does so excellently entertain us, and who does to highly deserve of us upon the score of his infinite perfections, and his inestimable benefits. Boyle.

And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize, On that rapacious hand for ever blaze! Pope.

INEVIDENT. adj. [inevident, Fr. in and evident.] Not plain; obscure. Not in use.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, and a stable assent unto things inevident, upon authority of the divine revealer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INEVITABILITY. n. f. [from inevitable.] Impossibility to be avoided; certainty.

By liberty, I do understand neither a liberty from sin, misery, servitude, nor violence, but from necessity, or rather necessitation; that is, an universal immunity from all inevitability and determination to one. Brinkhall against Hobbes.

INEVITABLE. adj. [inevitable, Fr. inevitable, Lat.] Unavoidable; not to be escaped.

I had a pass with him: he gives me the stick in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Fate inevitable

Subduces us.

Milton.

Since my inevitable death you know,

You safely unavailing pity show.

Dryden.

INEVITABLY, adv. [from inevitable.]

Without possibility of escape.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command

Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die.

Milton.

How inevitably does an immoderate laughter end in a fight!

South.

If they look no further than the next line, it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point.

Dryden.

Inflammations of the bowels oft inevitably tend to the ruin of the whole.

Harvey.

If our sense of hearing were exalted we should have no quiet or sleep in the silent nights, and we must inevitably be stricken deaf or dead with a clap of thunder.

Bentley.

INEXCUSABLE, adj. [inexcusable, Fr. in excusable, Lat. in and excusable.] Not to be excused; not to be palliated by apology.

It is a temerity, and a folly inexcusable, to deliver up ourselves needlessly into another's power.

L'Estrange.

As we are an island with ports and navigable seas, we should be inexcusable if we did not make these blessings turn to account.

Adelphi.

Such a favour could only render them more absurdate, and more inexcusable: it would enhance their guilt.

Atterbury.

If learning be not encouraged under your administration, you are the most inexcusable person alive.

Swift.

A fallen woman is the more inexcusable, as,

from the cradle, the sex is warned against the de-lusions of men.

Clarissa.

INEXCUSABLENESS, n. f. [from inexcusable.]

Enormity beyond forgiveness or palliation.

Their *inexcusable*ness is stated upon the suppo-

him.

South.

INEXCUSABLY, adv. [from inexcusable.]

To a degree of guilt or folly beyond excuse.

It will inexcusably condemn some men, who having received excellent endowments, yet have frustrated the intention.

Brown.

INEXHAUSTABLE, adj. [in and exhaust.]

That cannot evaporate.

A new laid egg will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhaustable parts into cohsistence.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INEXHAUSTED, adj. [in and exhausted.]

Unemptied; not possible to be emptied.

So wert thou born into a tuneful strain,

An airy, rich, and inexhausted vein.

Dryden.

INEXHAUSTIBLE, adj. [in and exhaustible.]

Not to be drawn all away; not to be spent.

Reflected on the variety of combinations which may be made with number, whole stock is in- exhaustible and truly infinite.

Locke.

The stock that the mind has in its power, by varying the idea of space, is perfectly in- exhaustible, and so it can multiply figures in infinity.

Locke.

INEXISTENT, adj. [in and existent.]

1. Not having being; not to be found in nature.

To express complexed significations, they took a liberty to compound and piece together creatures of allowable forms into mixtures inexistent.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Existing in something else. This use is rare.

We doubt whether these heterogeneities be so much as inexistent in the concrete, whence they are obtained.

Boyle.

INEXISTENCE, n. f. [in and existence.]

Want of being; want of existence.

He calls up the heroes of former ages from a state of inexistence to adorn and diversify his poem.

Brown on the Odyssey.

INEXORABLE, adj. [inexorable, Fr. inex-

orabilis, Lat.] Not to be entreated;

Sundys.

INEXPLICABLE, adj. [inexplicable, Fr. in and explicio, Lat.] Incapable of being explained; not to be made intelligible;

not to be disentangled.

What could such apprehensions breed, but, as their nature is, inexplicable passions of mind, desires abhorring what they embrace, and embracing what they abhor?

Hobbes.

To me at least this seems inexplicable, if light be nothing else than perfion or motion propagated through ether.

Newton.

None eludes gageous reason more,

Than this obscure inexplicable power.

Blackmore.

INEXPLICABLY, adv. [from inexplicable.]

In a manner not to be explained.

INEXPRE'SSIBLE, adj. [in and express.]

Not to be told; not to be uttered; unutterable.

Thus when in orbs

Of circuit inexpressible they stood,

Orb within orb.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of human nature, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy and secret in- expressible communications.

South.

The true God had no certain name given to him; for Father, and God, and Creator, are but titles arising from his works; and God is not a name but a notion ingrafted in human nature of an inexpressible being.

Stirlingfleet.

There is an imitable grace in Virgil's words: and in them principally consists that beauty, which gives to inexpressible a pleasure to him who best understands their force: this diction of his is never to be copied.

Dryden.

INEXPRE'SSIBLY, adv. [from inexpressible.]

To a degree or in a manner not to be uttered; unutterably.

God will protect and reward all his faithful servants in a manner and measure inexpressibly abundant.

Fr. infamis, Latin.] Publicly branded with guilt; openly censured; of bad report.

Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee, which art infamous.
Ezekiel.

These are as some infamous bawd or whore Should praise a matron; what could hurt her more? Ben Jonson.

After-times will dispute it, whether Hotham were more infamous at Hull or at Tower-hill.
King Charles.

Persons infamous or branded in any publick court of judicature, are forbidden to be advocates.
Ayliffe.

INFAMOUSLY. adv. [from infamous.]

1. With open reproach; with publick notoriety of reproach.

2. Shamefully; scandalously.
That poem was infamously bad. Dryden.

INFAMOUSNESS. } n. f. [infamie, Fr.
INFAMY. } infamia, Latin.] Publick reproach; notoriety of bad character.

Ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are the infamy of the people. Ezekiel.
The noble idle doth want her proper limbs,
Her face defac'd with fears of infamy. Shaksp.

Willful perpetrations of unworthy actions brand, with most indelible characters of infamy, the name and memory to posterity. King Charles.

INFANCY. n. f. [infantia, Latin.]

1. The first part of life. Usually extended by naturalists to seven years.

Dare we affirm it was ever his meaning, that unto their salvation, who even from their tender infancy never knew any other faith or religion than only christian, no kind of teaching can be available, saving that which was so needful for the first universal conversion of gentiles, hating christianity? Hooker.

Pirithous came to attend
This worthy Theseus, his familiar friend;
Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden.

The insensible impressions on our tender infan-
cies have very important and lasting consequences.
Locke.

2. Civil infancy, extended by the English law to one and twenty years.

3. First age of any thing; beginning;
original; commencement.

In Spain our springs, like old men's children,
Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy. Dryd.

The difference between the riches of Roman citizens in the infancy and in the grandeur of Rome, will appear by comparing the first valuation of estates with the estates afterwards possessed. Arbutnot on Cons.

INFANGTHEF, or bingsfangtheft, or infangtheef, is compounded of three Saxon words: the preposition in, fang or song, to take or catch, and theef. It signifies a privilege or liberty granted unto lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee. Cowell.

INFANT. n. f. [infant, Fr. infans, Latin.]

1. A child from the birth to the end of the seventh year.

It being a part of their virtuous education,
serveth greatly both to nourish in them the fear of God, and to put us in continual remembrance of that powerful grace, which openeth the mouths of infants to sound his praise. Hooker.

There shall be no more thence an infant or days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days.
Ussher.

Young mothers wildly stare, with fear possess'd,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast.
Dryden's Amad.

2. [In law.] A young person to the age of one and twenty.

INFANT. adj. Not mature; in a state of initial imperfection.

Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power.
Shakspere.

First the shrill found of a small rural pipe,
Was entertainment for the infant stage. Roscom.

In their tender ponage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head, Indulge their childhood. Dryden's Virgil.

INFANTA. n. f. [Spanish.] A princess descended from the royal blood of Spain.

INFANTICIDE. n. f. [infanticide, Fr.
infanticidium, Latin.] The slaughter of the infants by Harod.

INFANTILE. adj. [infantilis, Latin.] Pertaining to an infant.

The fly lies all the winter in its balls in its infantile state, and comes not to its maturity 'till the following spring. Darwin.

INFANTRY. n. f. [infanterie, Fr.] The foot soldiers of an army.

The principal strength of an army consisteth in the infantry or foot; and to make good infan- try it requireth men bred in some free and plentiful manner. Bacon's Henry viii.

That small infantry
Warr'd on by cranes. Milton.

INFARCTION. n. f. [in and farcio, Latin.]
Stuffing; constipation.

An hypochondriack consumption is occasioned by an infarction and obstruction of the spleen.
Harvey.

TO INFATUATE. v. a. [infatus, from in and fatuus, Latin; infatuer, French.]

To strike with folly; to deprive of understanding.

The judgment of God will be very visible in infatuating a people, as ripe and prepared for destruction, into folly and madnets, making the weak to contribute to the designs of the wicked; and suffering even those, out of a conscience of their guilt, to grow more wicked. Jerusalem.

It is the reforming of the vices and follies that had long overpread the infatuated gentile world: a prime leech of that design of Christ's sending his disciples. Hammond.

May hypocrites,
That slyly speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwear'd, 'till, by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose.

The people are so universally infatuated with the notion, that, if a cow falls sick, it is ten to one but an old woman is clapt up in prison for it.
Addison on Italy.

The carriage of our atheists or deists is amazing: no dotage to infatuate, no phrensy to extravagant as theirs. Bentley.

INFATUATION. n. f. [from infatuate.]

The act of striking with folly; deprivation of reason.

Where men give themselves over to the defence of wicked interests, and false propositions, it is just with God to smite the greatest abilities with the greatest infatuations. South.

INFELUSTING. n. f. [from infastus, Latin.]

The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelegant word.

As the king did in some part remove the envy from himself, so he did not observe, that he did withal bring a kind of malediction and infelusting upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick. Bacon.

INFESIBLE. adj. [in and feasible.] Impracticable; not to be done.

This is so difficult and infesible, that it may well drive modestly to despair of science. Glarv.

TO INFECT. v. a. [infester, Fr. infestus,
Latin.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

One of those fantastical mind infected people, that children and musicians call lovers. Sidney.
Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.
Shakspere.

The nature of bad news infects the teller.
Shaksp.

Er'ry day
It would infect his speech, that if the king Should without issue die, he'd carry it to
To make the sceptre his. Shakspere.

Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakspere.

She speaks poignards, and every word stabs:
if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star. Shakspere.

I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence. Shakspere.

The love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat. Milton.

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious.

Infected be the air whereon they ride,
And damn'd all those that trust them! Shaksp.

INFECTIOM. n. f. [infection, Fr. infectio, Latin.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from disordered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they came from. Quincy.

What a strange infection
Is fall'n into thy ear! Shakespeare's Cymb.
The blessed gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilst you Do climate here. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils, but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy curied self. Shakf.
Hence,

Left that th' infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Shaksp. King Lear
The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal;
but without there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no taste at all. Bacon.

INFECTIOUS. adj. [from infecti.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee. Shakf.
In a house,

Where the infectious pestilence did reign.

Some known diseases are infections, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilences and lippitudes. Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operations of some poisons, that are received only by the smell.
Temple.

INFECTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.] Con-tagiously.

The will dotes, that is inclinable
To what infectiously itself affects. Shakespeare.

INFECTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious; contagiousness.

INFECTIVE. adj. [from infecti.] Having the quality of acting by contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power. Shaksp.

INFECUND. n. f. [infecundus, Latin.] Un-fruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved. Derham.

INFECUNDITY. n. f. [infecunditas, Lat.] Want of fertility; barrenness.

INFELICITY. n. f. [infelicité, French; in-felicitas, Lat.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea. Watts.

TO INFER. v. a. [inferre, Fr. infero,
Latin.]

1. To bring on; to induce.
Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs.
Huxley.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition. Locke.

Yet what thou canst attain, which best may serve

To glorify the Maker and infer
Thou art happier, than not be with-held Tuy hearing. Milton.

Great,
Or bright, infer not excellence: the earth
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glistening, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.

One would wonder how, from so differing pre-misses, they should all infer the same conclusion.
Milton.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing public esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations. Decay of Piety.

3. To offer; to produce. Not in use.
Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator, infer arguments of mighty force. Shaksp.
INFERENCE. n. f. [inference, Fr. from infer.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference. Glauville.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument.

INFERRIBLE. adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferible from their premises. Brown.

INFERIORITY. n. f. [inferiorité, French, from inferiour.] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiory which is not possibly to be remedied. Dryden.

INFERIOUR. adj. [inferior, Latin;
inferieur, French.]

1. Lower in place.
2. Lower in station or rank of life: correlative to superiour.

Render me more equal, or perhaps Superior, for inferior who is free? Milton.

3. Lower in value or excellency.
The love of liberty with life is given,
And life itself th' inferiour gift of heav'n. Dryd.
I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferior to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of. Dryden.

4. Subordinate.
General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions. Watts.

INFERIOUR. n. f. [from the adjective.]
One in a lower rank or station than another.

A great person gets more by obliging his inferiour than by disdainning him. South.

INFERNAL. adj. [infernal, French; infernus, Lat.] Hellish; tartarean; detestable.

His gigantic limbs with large embrace,
In folds nine acres of infernal space. Dryden.

INFERNAL Stone. n. f.

Infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied. Hill's Mat. Med.

INFERTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity; inferund.

Ignorance being of itself, like infertile soil, and infertile soil, when you sow to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable.

Government of the Tongue.

INFERTILITY. n. f. [infertilité, Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulness; want of fertility.

The same distemperature of the air that occasioned the plague, occasioned the infertility or noxiousness of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very small, or very unwholesome. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO INFEST. v. a. [infester, French; in-festo, Lat.] To harass; to disturb; to plague.

Unto my feeble breast
Come gently; but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infest,
And hearts of greatest heroes do'st enrage. Spenser.

They ceased not, in the mean while, to strengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infest by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greatest adversaries in this cause.

Although they were a people infested, and mightily hated of all others, yet was there nothing of force to work the ruin of their state, till the time beforementioned was expired. Hooker.

They were no mean, distressed, calamitous persons that fled to him for refuge; but of so great quality, as it was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infest and invade his. Bacon's Henry vii.

Envy, avarice, superstition, love, with the like cares and passions infest human life. Addison.
No disease infests mankind more terrible in its symptoms and effects. Abrahamson on Diet.

INFESTIVITY. n. f. [in and festivity.] Mournfulness; want of cheerfulness.

INFESTED. adj. [in and feſter.] Rankling; inveterate. Obsolete.

This cursed creature, mindful of that old infested grudge, the which his mother felt,
So soon as Clarion he did behold,
His heart with vengeful malice inly sweet. Spenser.

INFEU'DATION. n. f. [in and feudum, Latin.] The act of putting one in possession of a fee or estate.

Another military provision was conventional and by tenure, upon the infestation of the tenant, and was usually called knight's service. Hale.

INFIDEL. n. f. [infidelle, Fr. infidelis, Latin.] An unbeliever; a miscreant;
a pagan; one who rejects christianity.

Exhorting her, if the did marry, yet not to join herself to an infidel, as in those times some widows christian had done, for the advancement of their estate in this world. Hooker.

INFIDELITY. n. f. [infidélité, Fr. infidelitas, Latin.]

1. Want of faith.
The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

2. Disbelief of christianity.
One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion; but so it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much feroceness and contention, as if the safety of mankind depended upon it. Addison's Spectator.

3. Treachery; deceit; breach of contract or trust.
The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this humdrum of life, render it silly and uncomfortable. Spenser.

INFINITE. adj. [infini, Fr. infinitus,
Latin.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What 's time, when on eternity we think?
A thousand ages in that sea must sink:
Time 's nothing but a word; a million
Is full as vast from infinite as one. Deakam.

Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will controuls

The inward bent and motion of our souls!
Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
Between the cause and cure of my disease. Prior.

When we would think of infinite space of duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:
Our vast conceptions are by swelling brought,
Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically used for large; great.

INFINITELY. adv. [from infinite.]

1. Without limits; without bounds; immensely.

Nothing may be infinitely desired, but that good which indeed is infinite. Hooker.

2. In a great degree.

This is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound. Shakspeare.

The king saw that contrariwise it would follow, that England, though much less in territory, yet should have infinitely more soldiers of their native forces than those other nations have. Bacon's Henry vii.

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have professed to act under a full persuasion of this great article. Rogers.

INFINITENESS. n. f. [from infinite.] Immenity; boundlessness; infinity.

The cunning of his flattery, the readiness of his tears, the infiniteness of his vows, were but among the weakest threads of his net. Sidney.

Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightyness, and express that infinite distance between his infiniteness and our weakness. Taylor.

INFINITE'SIMAL. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

INFINITIVE. adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely. Clarke.

INFINITUDE. n. f. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immensity.

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood still'd, stood vast infinitude combin'd. Milton.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, or continued quantity, and pends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude; yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from parts actually distinguished. Hale.

2. Boundless number.

We see all the good sense of the age cut out, and minced into almost an infinitude of distinctions. Addison's Spectator.

INFINITY. n. f. [infini, French; infinitas, Latin.]

1. Immenity; boundlessness; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh.

The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God; therefore he is our felicity and bliss. Hooker.

2. Endless number. A hyperbolical use of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Brown.

The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad symptoms. Arbuth.

INFIRM. adj. [infirm, Fr. infirmus, Lat.]

1. Weak; feeble; disabled of body.

Here stand I your brave;
A poor, infirm, weak, and despit'd old man. Shakspeare.

2. Weak of mind; irresolute.

I am afraid to think what I have done:
Look on 't again, I dare not.
—Infirm of purpose;
Give me the dagger. Shakspeare.

That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty, and infirm sex, forgiv'n;
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton.

3. Not stable; not solid.

He who fixes upon false principles, treads upon infirm ground, and so sinks; and he who fails in his deductions from right principles, stumbles upon firm ground, and falls. South.

TO INFIRM. v. a. [infirm, Fr. infirm, Latin.] To weaken; to shake; to enfeeble. Not in use.

Some contrary spirits will object this as a sufficient reason to infirm all those points. Raleigh's Essays.

The spleen is unjustly introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, being dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate it. Brown.

INFIRMARY. n. f. [infirmier, French.] Lodgings for the sick.

These buildings to be for privy lodgings on both sides, and the end for privy galleries, whereof one should be for an infirm, if any special person should be sick. Bacon.

INFIRMITY. n. f. [infirmi, French.]

1. Weakness of sex, age, or temper.

Infirmary,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seiz'd
His with'd ability. Shakspeare.

Discover thine infirmity,
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege:
I am with child, ye bloody homicides. Shakspeare.

If he had done or said any thing amiss, he desired their worthips to think it was his infirmity. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

Are the infirmities of the body, pains, and diseases his complaints? His faith reminds him of the day when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality. Rogers.

2. Failing; weakness; fault.

A friend should bear a friend's infirmities;
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are. Shakspeare.

Many infirmities made it appear more requisite, that a wiser man should have the application of his interest. Clarendon.

How difficult is it to preserve a great name, when he that has acquired it, is so obnoxious to such little weaknesses and infirmities, as are no small diminution to it. Addison.

3. Disease; malady.

General laws are like general rules of physick, according whereunto, as now, no wise man will desire himself to be cured, if there be joined with his disease some special accident, in regard that thereby others in the same infirmity, but without the like accident, may. Hooker.

Sometimes the uses of man may be depraved by the infirmities of birth. Temple.

INFIRMNESS. n. f. [from infirm.] Weakness; feebleness.

Some experiments may discover the infirmities and insufficiency of the peripatetic doctrine. Boyle.

TO INFIX. v. a. [infixus, Lat.] To drive in; to set; to fix.

And at the point two things infix'd are,
Both deadly sharp, that sharpest steel exceeds far. Spranger.

I never lov'd myself,
'Till now, infix'd, I behold myself,
Drawn in the flatter'd table of her eye. Shakspeare.

Immovable, infix'd, and frozen round. Milton.

That sting infix'd within her haughty mind,
And her proud heart with secret sorrow pin'd. Dryden.

The fatal dart a ready passage found,
And deep within her heart infix'd the wound. Dryden.

TO INFLAME. v. a. [inflamm, Lat.]

1. To kindle; to set on fire; to make to burn.

Love more clear, dedicated to a love more cold, with the clearness lays a night of sorrow upon me, and with the coldness inflames a world of fire within me. Sidney.

Its waves of torrent fire inflam'd with rage. Milton.

2. To kindle any passion.

Their lust was inflam'd towards her. Susannah.

This it will do, if the ambient air be impregnate with subtle inflammabilities. Brown.

Choler is the most inflammable part of the blood; whence, from its inflammability, it is called a sulphur. Hartwig.

INFLAMMABLE. adj. [French.] Easy to be set on flame; having the quality of flaming.

The juices of olives, almonds, nuts, and pine-apples, are all inflammable. Bacon.

Licetis thin; it possible to extract an inflammable oil from the stone aethus. Wilkins.

Out of water grow all vegetable and animal substances, which consist as well of sulphureous, fat, and inflammable parts, as of earthy and alkaline ones. Newton's Opticks.

Inflammable spirits are subtle volatile liquors, which come over in distillation, miscible with water, and wholly combustible. Arbuthnot.

INFLAMMABLENESS. n. f. [from inflammable.] The quality of easily catching fire.

We may treat of the inflammableness of bodies. Boyle.

INFLAMMATION. n. f. [inflammatio, Latin; inflammation, French.]

1. The act of setting on flame.

Inflammations of air from meteors, may have a powerful effect upon men. Temple.

2. The state of being in flame.

The flame extendeth not beyond the inflammable effluence, but closely adheres unto the original of its inflammation. Brown.

Some urns have had inscriptions on them, expelling that the lamps within them were burning when they were first buried: whereas the inflammation of fat and viscous vapours doth presently vanish. Walker's Dædalus.

3. [In chirurgery.] Inflammation is when the blood is obstructed so as to crowd in a greater quantity into any particular part, and gives it a greater colour and heat than usual. Quincy.

If that bright spot stay in his place, it is an inflammation of the burning. Lexicons.

4. The act of exciting fervour of mind.

Prayer kindleth our desire to behold God by speculation, and the mind, delighted with that contemplative sight of God, taketh every where new inflammations to pray the riches of the mysteries of heavenly wisdom, continually stirring up in us correspondent desires towards them. Hooper.

INFLAMMATORY. adj. [from inflame.]

Having the power of inflaming.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities: such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper. Arbuth.

An inflammatory fever hurried him out of this life in three days. Pope to Swift.

He believes the sentence is true, as it is made up of terms which his informant understands, though the ideas be unknown to him which his informant has under these words. Watts.

2. One who exhibits an accusation.

INFORMATION. n. s. [informatio, Latin; from inform.]

1. Intelligence given; instruction.

But reason with the fellow,
Lest you should chance to whip your information,
And heat the messenger who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded. Shakspeare.

The active information of the intellect filling the passive reception of the will, like form closing with matter, grew accurate into a third and distinct perfection of practice. Saunders's Sermons.

They gave those complex ideas names, that the things they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the easier and quicker understood. Locke.

He should regard the propriety of his words, and get some information in the subject he intends to handle. Swift.

These men have had longer opportunities of

From whom the doctrines being infusible into all, it will be more necessary to forewarn all of the danger of them. Hommond.

2. Incapable of dissolution; not fusible; not to be melted.

Vitrification is the last work of fire, and a fusion of the salt and earth, wherein the fusible salt draws the earth and infusible part into one continuum. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INFUSION. n. f. [infusion, French; infusio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring in; instillation.

Our language has received innumerable elegancies and improvements from that infusion of Hebraisms, which are derived to it out of the poetical passages in holy writ. Addison.

2. The act of pouring into the mind; inspiration.

We participate Christ partly by imputation, as when those things which he did and suffered for us are imputed to us for righteousness; partly by habitual and real infusion, as when grace is inwardly bestowed on earth, and afterwards more fully both our souls and bodies in glory. Hasker.

3. Suggestion; whisper.

They found it would be matter of great debate, and spend much time, during which they did not desire their company, nor to be troubled with their infusions. Clarendon.

Here his folly and his wisdom are of his own growth, not the echo or infusion of other men. Swift.

The greater appearance of ingeniousness there is in the practice I am disapproving, the more dangerous it is. Boyle.

INGENITE. adj. [ingenitus, Lat.] Innate; inborn; native; ingenerate.

Aristotle affirms the mind to be at first a mere rafa tabula; and that notions are not ingenite, and imprinted by the finger of nature, but by the latter and more languid impressions of sense, being only the reports of observation, and the result of so many repeated experiments. Smith.

We give them this ingenite, moving force,
That makes them always downward take their course. Blackmore.

INGENUITY. n. f. [ingenuité, Fr. from ingenuus.]

1. Openness; fairness; candour; freedom from dissimulation.

Such of high quality, or rather of particular note, as shall fall under my pen, I shall not let pass without their due character, being part of my professed ingenuity. Hutton.

My constancy I to the planets give;
My truth, to them who at the court do live;
Mine ingenuity and openness
To Jesuits; to buffoons my pensiveness. Dome.

I know not whether it be more shame or wonder, that men can so put off ingenuity, and the native greatness of their kind, as to descend to so base, to ignoble a vice. Gou. of Tongue.

If a child, when questioned for any thing, directly confesses, you must commend his ingenuity, and pardon the fault, be it what it will. Locke.

2. [from ingenious.] Wit; invention;

genius; subtilty; acuteness.
These are but the frigidities of wit, and become not the genius of many ingenuities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ancient atomical hypothesis might have slept for ever, had not the ingenuity of the present age recalled it from its urn and silence. Glaucon.

Such sots have neither parts nor wit, ingenuity of discourse, nor fineness of conversation, to entertain or delight any one. South.

A pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity, and how much an honest simplicity is preferable to fine parts and subtle speculations. Hudson.

INGENUOUS. adj. [ingenuus, Latin.]

1. Open; fair; candid; generous; noble.

Many speeches there are of Job's, whereby his wisdom and other virtues may appear; but the glory of an ingenuous mind is best purchas'd by these words only, Behold I will lay mine hand upon my mouth; I have spoken once, yet will I not therefore maintain argument; yea twice, howbeit for that cause further I will not proceed. Halter.

Infuse into their young breasts such an ingenious and noble ardour, as would not fail to make many of them renowned. Swift.

If an ingenious detection of falsehood be but carefully and early instilled, that is the true and genuine method to obviate dishonesty. Lo ke.

3. Freeborn; not of servile extraction.
Subjection, as it preserves property, peace, and safety, so it will never diminish rights nor ingenious liberties. K. Charles.

INGENUOUSLY. adv. [from ingenuous.]
Openly; fairly; candidly; generously.

Ingeniously I speak,
No blame belongs to thee. Shaksp. Timon.

It was a notable observation of a wise father, and no less ingeniously confessed, that those which held and persuaded pressure of consciences were commonly interested. Bacon.

I will ingeniously confess, that the helps were taken from divines of the church of England. Dryden.

INGENUOUSNESS. n. f. [from ingenuous.]
Openness; fairness; candour.

INGENY. n. f. [ingenium, Lat.] Genius; wit. Not in use.

Whatever of the production of his ingeny comes into foreign parts, is highly valued. Boyle.

To INGEST. v. a. [ingestus, Latin.]

Nor will we affirm that iron, ingested, receiveth in the belly of the ossifrage no alteration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Blackmore.

INGESTION. n. f. [from ingest.] The act of throwing into the stomach.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimension, which is performed by the daily ingestion of milk and other food, that's in a short time after digested into blood. Harvey.

INGLORIOUS. adj. [inglorius, Lat.]
Void of honour; mean; without glory.

Left fear return them back to Egypt, chusing inglorious life with servitude. Milton.

It was never held inglorious or derogatory for a king to be guided by his great council, nor dishonourable for subjects to yield and bow to their king. Howell.

Yet though our army brought not conquest home,

I did not from the fight inglorious come. Dryd.

INGLORIOUSLY. adv. [from inglorious.]

With ignominy; with want of glory.

This vase the chief o'ercome, Repentist'd not ingloriously at home. Pope.

INGOT. n. f. [ingot, French; or from ingoten, melted, Dutch.] A mass of metal.

Some others were new driven, and dissent
Into great ingots, and to wedges square. Spenser.

If thou art rich, thou'rt poor;
For like an ass, whose back 's with ingots bound,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloadeth thee. Shakspere.

Within the circle arms and tripods lie,
Ingots of gold and silver heap'd on high. Dryden.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intimately and solidly valuable. Prior.

To INGRAFT. v. a. [in and graff.]

1. To propagate trees by infusion.

Nor are the ways alike in all
How to ingraft, how to inoculate. Mary's Virgil.

Rock of another: as, he ingrafted an apple upon a crab.

3. To plant or introduce any thing not native.

All his works on me,
Good or not good, ingraft, my merits those Shall possess, and for those alone. Milton.

As next of kin, Archilles' arms I claim;
Thou fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our Buck. Dryden.

4. To fix deep; to settle.

For a spur of diligence, we have a natural thirst after knowledge ingrafted in us. Hooker.

'Tis great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second,
With one of an ingraft infirmity. Shakspere.

Ingraffed love he bears to Caesar. Shaksp.

INGRAFTMENT. n. f. [from ingraft.]

1. The act of ingrafting.

INGRATE. } adj. [ingratus, Latin; INGRATEFUL. } ingrat, French.] In- grate is proper, but ingrateful less proper than ungrateful.

1. Ungrateful; unthankful.

That we have been familiar,
Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

And you degenerate, you ingrate revolt. Shak.

So will fall
He and his faithless progeny: whose fault?
Whose but his own? Ingrate; he had of me
All he could have: I made him just and right, Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall. Milt.

Perfidious and ingrate!
His stores ye ravage, and usurp his state. Pope.

2. Unpleasing to the sense.

The causes of that which is unpleasing or ingrate to the hearing, may receive light by that which is pleasing and grateful to the sight.

Bacon's Natural History.

He gives no ingrat-ful food. Milton.

To INGRATiate. v. a. [in and gratia, Latin.] To put in favour; to recommend to kindness. It has with before the person whose favour is sought.

Those have been far from receiving the rewards of such ingratiations with the people. King Charles.

Their managers make them see armies in the air, and give them their word, the more to ingratiate themselves with them, that they signify nothing less than future slaughter and desolation. Addison.

Politicians, who would rather ingratiate themselves with their sovereign than promote his real service, accommodate his counsels to his inclinations. Spektator.

INGRATITUDE. n. f. [ingratitude, French; in and gratitude.] Retribution of evil for good; unthankfulness.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster. Shakspere's King Lear.

Ingratitude is abhorred both by God and man, and vengeance attends those that repay evil for good. L'Frange.

Nor was it with ingratitude return'd,
In equal fires the blissful couple burn'd;
One joy possess'd 'em both, and in one grief
they mourn'd. Dryden.

INGREDIENT. n. f. [ingredient, French; ingredients, Latin.]

1. Component part of a body, consisting of different materials. It is commonly used of the simples of a medicine.

The ointment is made of divers ingredients, whereof the hardest to come by is the maul upon the skull of a dead man unburied. Bacon.

So deep the power of these ingredients pierc'd,
Ev'n to the inmost seat of mental sight,
That Adam, now enforc'd to shut his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Milton.

By this way of analysis we may proceed from compounds to ingredients, and from motions to the forces producing them; and in general, from effects to their causes, and from particular causes to more general ones, till the argument end in the more general. Newton.

I have often wondered, that learning is not thought a proper ingredient in the education of a woman of quality or fortune. Addison.

Parts, knowledge, and experience, are excellent ingredients in a public character. Rogers.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The fragrant murmurs of the western gale. Pope.

These fits the shepherd on the grassy turf,
Inhaling healthful the descending sun. Thomson.

INHARMONIOUS. adj. [in and harmonious.] Unmusical; not sweet of sound.

Catullus, though his lines be rough, and his numbers inharmounious, I could recommend for the softness and delicacy, but must decline for the looseness, of his thoughts. Fellow.

The identity of sound may appear a little inharmounious, and shock the ear. Brown.

TO INHERE. v. n. [inhereo, Latin.] To exist in something else.

For, nor in nothing, nor in things
Extreme and scattering bright, can love inhere. Donne.

They do but inhere in their subject which supports them; their being is a dependance on a subject. Digby on Bodies.

INNERENT. adj. [inherent, French; inherens, Latin.]

1. Existing in something else, so as to be inseparable from it.

I will not do't,
Left I succende to honour mine own truth;
And, my body's action, teach my mind
A most inherent baseness. Shakspeare.

2. Naturally conjoined; innate; inborn.

I mean not the authority which is annexed to your office: I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden's Juvenal.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone; and a power to be so drawn is a part of the complex one of iron; which powers pass for inherent qualities. Locke.

Animal oil is various according to principles inherent in it. Abbot on Aliments.

They will be sure to decide in favour of themselves, and talk much of their inherent right. Swift.

The ideas of such modes can no more be sufficient, than the idea of redness was just now found to be inherent in the blood, or that of whiteness in the brain. Bentley.

The obligations we are under of distinguishing ourselves as much by an inherent and habitual, as we are already distinguished by an external and relative holiness. Bentley.

TO INHERIT. v. a. [enheriter, French.]

1. To receive or possess by inheritance.

Treason is not inherited, my lord. Shakspeare.

Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain,

Which with pain purchas'd doth inherit pain. Shakspeare.

Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like lean, sterile land, manured with excellent good store of fertile herries. Shakspeare.

Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Matthew.

The son can receive from his father good things, without empire, that was vested in him for the good of others; and therefore the son cannot claim or inherit it by a title, which is founded wholly on his own private good. Locke.

We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can know who has a right to succeed him in it, and inherit it from him. Locke.

Unwilling to sell an estate he had some prospect of inheriting, he formed delays. Addison.

2. To possess; to obtain possession of: in Shakspeare. Not used.

He, that had wit, would think that I had none,

To buy so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it. Titus Andronicus.

INHERITABLE. adj. [from inherit.] Transmissible by inheritance; obtainable by succession.

A kind of inheritable estate accrued unto them. Carew.

By the ancient laws of the realm, they were not inheritable to him by descent. Hayward.

INHERITANCE. n. f. [from inherit.]

1. Patrimony; hereditary possession.

When the son dies, let the inheritance descend unto the daughter. Shakspeare Henry v.

Is there yet any portion or inheritance for us in our father's house? Genesis.

Claim our just inheritance of old. Milton.

O dear, unhappy babe! must I bequeath thee
Only a sad inheritance of woe?
Gods' cruel gods! can't all my pains atone,
Unless they reach my infant's guiltless head. Smith.

2. The reception of possession by hereditary right.

Men are not proprietors of what they have merely for themselves, their children have a title to part of it, which comes to be wholly theirs, when death has put an end to their parents' use of it; and this we call inheritance. Locke.

3. In Shakspeare, possession.

You will rather show our general laws
How you can frown, than spend a frown upon them,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin. Coriolanus.

INHERITOR. n. f. [from inherit.] An heir; one who receives any thing by succession.

You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins,
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shak.
The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more? Shakspeare.

Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they must it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents' inheritance. Bacon's New Atlantis.

 their want of justice with inhumanity and impudence. King Charles.

Each facial feeling fell,
 And joyless inhumanity pervades,
 And petrifies the heart. Thompson's Spring.

INHUMANLY. adv. [from inhuman.] Savage; cruelly; barbarously.

What are these Death's ministers, not men: who thus deal death

Inhumanly to men; and multiply
 Ten thousand fold the sin of him who slew
 His brother! Milton.

I, who have established the whole system of all true politeness and refinement in conversation, think myself most inhumanly treated by my countrymen. Swift.

TO INHUMATE. } v. a. [inhumer, Fr.

 of all iniquity amongst men. Hooker.

Till God at last,
 Wearied with their iniquities, withdraw
 His presence from among them. Milton.

INITIAL. adj. [initial, French; initialis, from initium, Latin.]

1. Placed at the beginning.
 In the editions, which had no more than the initial letters of names, he was made by keys to hurt the inoffensive. Pope.

2. Incipient; not complete.
 Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and cures many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

The schools have used a middle term to express this affection, and have called it the initial fear of God. Rogers.

TO INITIATE. v. a. [initier, French; initio, Latin.] To enter; to instruct in the rudiments of an art; to place in a new state; to put into a new society.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry. Moor.

To initiate his pupil in any part of learning,
 an ordinary skill in the government is enough.

He was initiated into half a dozen clubs before he was one and twenty. Spektator.

No sooner was a convert initiated, but, by an easy figure, he became a new man. Addison.

TO INITIATE. v. n. To do the first part; to perform the first rite.

The king himself initiates to the pow'r,
 Scatters with quiv'ring hand the sacred flour,
 And the stream sprinkles. Pope's Odyssey.

INITIATE. adj. [initié, French; initiator, Latin.] Unpractised.

tus, injunctio, Latin.]

1. Command; order; precept.

The institution of God's law is described as being established by solemn injunctio. Hooker.

My duty cannot suffer

T' obey in all your daughter's hard commands;

Though the injunction be to bar my doors,

And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you.

Shakspere.

For, still they knew; and ought t' have still remember'd

The high injunction, not to taste that fruit,

Whoever tempted. Milton.

The ceremonies of the church are necessary as the injunctious of lawful authority, the practice of the primitive church, and the general rules of decency. South.

2. In law.

Injunction is an interlocutory decree out of the chancery, sometimes to give possession unto the plaintiff for want of appearance in the defendants, sometimes to the king's ordinary court, and sometimes to the court-christian, to stay proceeding. Conwell.

This tribute from us, we were free. Shakspere.

Injurious strength would rapine still excuse,
By off'ring terms the weaker must refuse. Dryd.

2. Guilty of wrong or injury.

Yet beauty, though injurious, hath strange power,

After offence returning, to regain Love once posset. Milton's Agonist.

3. Mischievous ; unjustly hurtful.

Our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our fault, or at least to hinder the injurious consequences of it from proceeding. Tilghson.

4. Detractory ; contumelious ; reproachful ; wrongful.

A prison, indeed injurious, because a prison, but else well testifying affection, because in all respects as commodious as a prison can be. Sidney.

It is natural for a man, by directing his prayers to an image, to suppose the being he prays to represented by that image : which how injurious, how contumelious must it be to the glorious nature of God ! South.

If injurious appellations were of any advantage to a cause, what appellations would those defence who endeavour to sow the seeds of sedition ? Swift.

INJURIOUSLY. adv. [from injurious.]

Wrongfully ; hurtfully with injustice, with contumely.

Nor ought he to neglect the vindication of his character, when it is injuriously attacked. Pope and Gay.

INJURIOUSNESS. n. f. [from injurious.]

Quality of being injurious.

Some mischances might escape, rather through sudden necessities of fate, than any propensity either to injuriousness or oppression. King Charles.

INJURY. n. f. [injuria, Latin ; injure, French.]

1. Hurt without justice.

without being punished. Swift.

INK. n. f. [encre, Fr. inchiostro, Italian.]

1. The black liquor with which men write.

Mourn boldly, my ink ; for while she looks upon you, your blackness will shine. Sidney.

O ! she's fallen
Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea
Hath drops too few to wash her clean again. Shakspere.

Like madmen they burl'd stones and ink. Ben Jonson.

Intending to have try'd
The silver favour which you gave,

INL

In let the shining point I dy'd,
And drench'd it in the fable wave. Waller.

Vitrol is the active or chief ingredient in ink, and no other salt will strike the colour with galls. Brown.

I have found pens blacked almost all over when I had a while carried them about me in a silver ink case. Boyle.

The secretary poured the ink box all over the writings, and so defaced them. Howel.

jail ; we are now to examine those men. Shaksp.

Ere that we will suffer such a prince
To be disgrac'd by an inkhorn mate,
We, and our wives and children, all will fight. Shakspere.

What is more frequent than to say, a silver inkhorn ? Grew.

INKLE. n. f. A kind of narrow fillet ;
a tape.

Inkles, caddises, cambricks, lawns : why he sings them over as they were gods and goddesses. Shakspere.

I twitch'd his dangling garter from his knee :
He will not when the bempen string I drew,
Now mine I quickly dust of inkle blue. Gay.

INKLING. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from inklincken, to found within. This sense is still retained in Scotland : as, I heard not an inkling.]
Hint ; whisper ; intimation.

Our business is not unknown to the senate :
they have had inkling what we intend to do,
which now we'll shew them in deeds. Shaksp.

We in Europe, notwithstanding all the remote discoveries and navigations of this last age, never heard of any of the least inkling or glimpse of this island. Bacon's New Atlantis.

They had some inkling of secret messages between the marquis of Newcastle and young Hotham. Clarendon.

Aboard a Corinthian vessel he got an inkling
among the ship's crew of a conspiracy. L'Estr.

I couple together ; I find their dimensions brought under one. Wotton.

She through the porch and inlet of each sense Dropt in ambrosial oils till the reviv'd. Milton.

I desire any one to assign any simple idea, which is not received from one of these inlets. Locke.

A fine bargain indeed, to part with all our commodious ports, which the greater the inlets is are so much the better, for the imaginary pleasure of a freight there. Bentley.

Inlets amongst broken lands and islands. Ellis.

INLY. adj. [from in.] Interior ; internal ; secret.

Did'st thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou would'st as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words. Shakspere.

INLY. adv. Internally ; within ; secretly ; in the heart.

Her heart with joy unvented inly swell'd,
As feeling wound'rous comfort in her weaker ead. Spenser.

I've only wept,
O should have spoke the truth. Shakespeare.
Whereat he only laugh'd, and as they talk'd,
Singe him thro' the middle with a stone,
That bear out life. Milton.
These growing thoughts, my mother from prison
By words at times oft forth, only rejoic'd. Milton.
The soldiers shout around with gaudious rage;
He prais'd their ardor: only pleas'd to see His folk. Dryden's King's Tale.

INNATE. n. f. [in and mate.] Inmates are those that be admitted to dwell for their money jointly with another man, though in several rooms of his mansion-house, passing in and out by one door. Cowell.

So spake the enemy of mankind, inclin'd
In serpent, estate bad! and toward Eve
Address'd his way. Milton.

There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown,
Succeeded to a frequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth, as innate guests Too numerous. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Hume is the sacred refuge of our life,
Seem'd from all approaches but a wife:
It thence we fly, the cause admits no doubt,
None but an innate foe could force us out. Dryden.

INMOST. adj. [from in.] Deepest within; remotest from the surface.

Tis you must dig with mattock and with spade,

And pierce the innest centre of the earth. Shakspeare.
Rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Watch on my innest vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Addison.

Comparing the quantity of light reflected from the several rings, I found that it was most copious from the first or innest, and in the exterior rings became less and less. Newton.

He sends a dreadful groan: the rocks around Through all their innest hollow caves resound. Pope.

I got into the innest court. Gulliver.

INN. n. f. [inn, Saxon, a chamber.]

1. A house of entertainment for travellers.

How all this is but a fair inn,
Of fairer guests which dwell within. Sidney.
Palmer, quoth he, death is an equal doom
To good and bad, the common inn of rest;
But, after death, the trial is to come,
When best shall be to them that lived best. Fairy Queen.

Now day is spent,
Therefore with me ye may take up your inn. Fairy Queen.

The west, that glimmers with some streaks of day,

Now suits the lated traveller's space
To gain the timely inn. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end. Dryden.

One may learn more here in one day, than in a year's rambling from one inn to another. Lodge.

2. A house where students were boarded and taught: whence we still call the colleges of common law inns of court.

Go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inn of courts: down with them all. Shakspeare.

3. It was anciently used for the town houses in which great men resided when they attended the court.

To INN. v. n. [from the noun.] To take up temporary lodging.

In thyself dwell;

INN any where: continuance maketh hell. Dante.

To INN. v. a. To house; to put under cover.

He that care my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to run the crop. Shakspeare.

Howsoever the laws made in that innocuous
did bear good fruit, yet the faculty here a fruit that proved harsh and bitter: all was innocent at last into the king's harm. Bacon's Essays, vii.

Now clove or eye-grains, and make it fit to inn. Mortimer.

INNATE. } adj. [inné, French; innatus, Latin.]

1. Inborn; ingenerate; natural; not superadded; not adventitious. Innate is not proper.

The Division hath been cried up for an innate integrity, and accounted the uprightest dealer on earth. Howell.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the piece, yet the people charm'd. Shakspeare.

2. Innate is used in the following passage for inherent. Innate in persons, inherent in things.

Mutual gravitation, or spontaneous attraction, cannot possibly be innate and essential to matter. Bentley.

INNATENESS. n. f. [from innate.] The quality of being innate.

INNATIGABLE. adj. [innavigabilis, Lat.] Not to be passed by sailing.

If you so hard a trial will undertake,
As twice to pass th' innavigable lake. Dryden.

INNER. adj. [from in.] Interior; not outward.

But th' elfin knight with wonder all the way
Did feed his eyes, and blid his inner thought. Spenser.

This attends the soul,
Governs the inner man, the nobler part;
That other o'er the body only reigns. Milton.

Many families are established in the West Indies, and some discovered in the inner parts of America. Addison's Spectator.

The kidney is a conglomerated gland, which is to be understood only of the outer part; for the inner part, whereof the papillae are composed, is muscular. Grew.

Thus, seiz'd with sacred fear, the monarch
pray'd;

Then to his inner court the guests convey'd. Pope.

INNERMOST. adj. [from inner.] It seems less proper than innest. Remotest from the outward part.

The reflected beam of light would be so broad at the distance of six feet from the spectrum, where the rings appeared, as to obscure one or two of the innermost rings. Newton.

INNERHOLDER. n. f. [inn and holder.] A man who keeps an inn; an innkeeper.

INNINGS. n. f. Lauds recovered from the sea. Ainsworth.

INNERKEEPER. n. f. [inn and keeper.] One who keeps lodgings and provisions for the entertainment of travellers.

Clergymen must not keep a tavern, nor a judge be an innerkeeper. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.
A factious innerkeeper was hanged, drawn, and quartered. Addison's Freeholder.

We were not so inquisitive about the inn as the innerkeeper; and provided our landlord's principles were sound, did not take any notice of the state of his provisions. Addison.

INNOCENCE. } n. f. [innocence, French; innocentia, Latin.]

1. Purity from injurious action; untainted integrity.

Simplicity and spotless innocence. Milton.
What comfort does overflow the devout soul, from a consciousness of its own innocence and integrity! Tillotson.

2. Freedom from guilt imputed.

It will help me nothing

To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whit'nd part black. Shakspeare.
If truth and uprightness innocently fail me,
I'll to the king my master. Shakspeare.

3. Harmlessness; innocuousness.

The air was calm and serene; none of those tumultuary motions and conflicts of vapours, which the mountains and the winds cause in ours: 'twas fair'd to a golden age, and to the first innocency of nature. Russet's Thing.

4. Simplicity of heart, perhaps with some degree of weakness.

I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence. Shakspeare.
We laugh at the malice of apes, as well as at the innocence of children. Temple.

INNOCENT. adj. [innocens, French; innocens, Latin.]

1. Pure from mischief.

Something
You may deserve of him through me and wisdom,
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
T' appease an angry god. Shakspeare.
Wreck on innocent frail man his loss. Milton.

2. Free from any particular guilt.

Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;
The man is innocent. Shakspeare.
The peasant, innocent of all these ills,
With crooked ploughs the fertile fallow tills,
And the round year with daily labour fills. Dryden.

3. Unhurtful; harmless in effects.

The spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

INNOCENT. n. f.

1. One free from guilt or harm.

So pure an innocent as that same lamb. Fairy Queen.

Thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,
That e'er did hit my eye. Shakspeare's Othello.

The most dangerous poisons, skillfully managed, may be made not only innocuous, but of all other medicines the most effectual. Grew.

INNOCUOUSLY. adv. [from innocuous.]

Without mischievous effects.

Whether quails, from any peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellicore, or rather sometimes but medically use the same. Brewer's Vulgar Errors.

INNOCUOUSNESS. n. f. [from innocuous.]

Harmlessness.

The blow which shakes a wall, or beats it down, and kills men, hath a greater effect on the mind than that which penetrates into a mud wall, and doth little harm; for that innocuousness of the effect makes, that, although in itself it be as great as the other, yet 'tis little observed. Digby.

To INNOVATE. v. a. [innovare, Fr. innovo, Latin.]

1. To bring in something not known before.

Men pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon, and care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniences. Bacon.

INN

Former things
Are set aside like abdicated kings;
And every moment alters what is done,
And innovates some act 'till then unknown.

Dryden.
Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry; every man therefore is not fit to innovate.

Dryden.
2. To change by introducing novelties.

From his attempts upon the civil power, he proceeds to innovate God's worship.

South.
INNOVATION. n. f. [innovation, French, from innovare.] Change by the introduction of novelty.

The love of things ancient doth argue stayedness; but levity and want of experience maketh apt unto innovations.

Hooker.
It were good that men in innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees.

Bacon's Essays.
Great changes may be made in a government, yet the form continue, but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to make it of a piece with the constitution.

Swift.
INNOVATOR. n. f. [innovateur, French; from innovare.]

1. An introducer of novelties.

I attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to th' publick weal.
He that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator; and if time of course alter things to the worse, and wisdom and council shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end?

Bacon's Essays.
2. One that makes changes by introducing novelties.

He counsels them to detest and persecute all innovators of divine worship.

South.
INNOXIOUS. adj. [innoxius, Latin.]

1. Free from mischievous effects.

Innoxious flames are often seen on the hair of men's heads and horses' manes.
We may safely use purgatives, they being benign, and of innocuous qualities.
Sent by the better genius of the night,
Innoxious gleaming on the horse's mane
The meteor sits.

Thomson's Autumn.
2. Pure from crimes.

Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innoxious through his age.

Pope.
INNOXIOUSLY. adv. [from innoxious.]

1. Harmlessly; without harm done.

2. Without harm suffered.

Animals, that can innoxiously digest these poisons, become antidotal to the poison digested.

Boswell's Vulgar Errors.
INNOXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from innoxious.]

Harmlessness.

INNUE'NDU. n. f. [innuendo, from innuo, Latin.] An oblique hint.

As if the commandments, that require obedience and forbid murder, were to be insisted for a libellous innuendo upon all the great men that come to be concerned.

L'Estrange.
Mercury, though employed on a quite contrary errand, owns it a marriage by an innuendo.
Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints that Stella is no chicken;
Your innuendoes, when you tell us,
That Stella loves to talk with fellows.

Swift.
INNUMERABLE. adj. [innumerable, Fr. innumerabilis, Lat.] Not to be counted for multitude.

You have sent innumerable substance
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities.

Shakespeare.
Vol. I.

INO

Cover me, ye pines,
Ye cedars! with innumerable boughs
Hide me where I may never see them more.

Milton.
In lines, which appear of an equal length, one may be longer than the other by innumerable parts.

Locke.
INNUMERABLY. adv. [from innumerable.]

Without number.

INNUMEROUS. adj. [innumerus, Latin.]

Too many to be counted.

'Twould be some solace yet, some little cheering,
In this close dungeon of innumerable boughs.

Milton.
I take the wood,
And in thick shelter of innum'rous boughs,
Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows.

Pope.
TO INOCULATE. v. n. [inoculo, in and oculus, Lat.] To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Not are the ways alike in all
How to ingraft, how to inoculate.
Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree; inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month.

May's Virgil.
But various are the ways to change the state,
To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate.
Dryden.
TO INOCULATE. v. a. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it.
Thy stock is too much out of date,
For tender plants 't inoculate.
Where lilies, in a lovely brown,
Inoculate carnation.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Cleaveland.
INOCULATION. n. f. [inoculatio, Latin; from inoculare.]

1. The act of inserting the eye of a bud into another stock.

Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone fruit, and upon oranges and jasmynes. Chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut cross the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the footstalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud.

Milton.
In the stem of Elia's they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation.

Howell.
2. The practice of transplanting the smallpox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection.

Quincy.
It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produces the disease.

Arbuthnot.
INOCULATOR. n. f. [from inoculare.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the smallpox by inoculation.

INO

Had John a Gaddelden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators.

Friend's History of Physick.
INO'DORATE. adj. [in and odoratus, Lat.] Having no scent.

Whites are more inodorate than flowers of the same kind coloured.

Bacon's Natural History.
INO'DOROUS. adj. [inodorus, Latin.]

Wanting scent; not affecting the nose.
The white of an egg is a viscous, unactive, insipid, inodorous liquor.

Arbuthnot.
INOFFENSIVE. adj. [in and offensive.]

1. Giving no scandal; giving no provocation.

A stranger, inoffensive, unprovoking. Flatus.
However inoffensive we may be in other parts of our conduct, if we are found wanting in this trial of our love, we shall be disowned by God as traitors.

Regen.
2. Giving no uneasiness; causing no terror.

Should infants have taken offence at any thing, mixing pleasant and agreeable appearances with it, must be used, 'till it be grown inoffensive to them.

Locke.
3. Harmless; hurtless; innocent.

For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive most.
With white'er gall thou set'st thyself to woe,
Thy inoffensive sautes never bite.
Hark, how the cannon, inoffensive now,
Gives signs of gratulation.

Milton.
Dryden.
Phillips.
4. Unembarrassed; without stop or obstruction. A Latin mode of speech.

From hence a passage broad,
Smooth, easy, inoffensive, down to hell.

Milton.

INOFFICIOUS. adj. [in and officious.] Not civil; not attentive to the accommodation of others.

INO'PINATE. adj. [inopinatus, Lat. inopiné, Fr.] Not expected.

INO'PPORTUNE. adj. [inopportunus, Lat.] Unseasonable; inconvenient.

INO'RDINACY. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; disorder. It is safer to use inordination.

They become very sinful by the excess, which were not so in their nature: that inordinacy fits them in opposition to God's designation.

Government of the Tongue.
INO'RDINATE. adj. [in and ordinatus, Latin.] Irregular; disorderly; deviating from right.

These people were wisely brought to allegiance; but being straight left unto their own inordinate life, they forgot what before they were taught.

Spenser on Ireland.
Thence raise
A little discompe'd, discontented thoughts;
Vain hopes, vain aims, inordinate desires,
Blown up with high conceits engend'ring pride.

Milton.
From inordinate love and vain fear comes all unquietness of spirit.
Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
INO'RDINATELY. adv. [from inordinate.]

Irregularly; not rightly.

As soon as man desires any thing inordinately, he is presently conquered in himself.

Taylor.
INO'RDINATENESS. n. f. [from inordinate.] Want of regularity; intemperance of any kind.

INO'RDINATION. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; deviation from right.

Schoolmen and casuists, having too much philosophy to clear a lie from that intrinsic inordinance and deviation from right reason, inherent to the nature of it, held that a lie was absolutely and universally sinful. South.

INORGANICAL. adj. [in and organical.] Void of organs or instrumental parts.

We come to the lowest and the most inorganic parts of matter. Locke.

TO INOSCULATE. v. n. [in and osculum, Latin.] To unite by apposition or contact.

This fifth conjugation of nerves is branched by inosculating with nerves. Derham.

INOSCULATION. n. f. [from inosculate.] Union by conjunction of the extremities.

The almost infinite ramifications and inosculations of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses. Key.

INQUEST. n. f. [enqueste, French; inquisitio, Latin.]

1. Judicial inquiry or examination.

What confusion of face shall we be under, when that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities of doing good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them, is given us? Atterb.

2. In law.

The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of all causes, both civil and criminal; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each party thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impanelled by the sheriff; and as they bring in their verdict to judgment passes: for the judge saith, The jury finds the fact thus; then is the law thus, and so we judge. Cowell.

At the life of Rhee he insinuated himself into the very good grace of the duke of Buckingham. Clarendon.

3. To hint; to impart indirectly.

And all the fictions hardy pursue
Do but insinuate what's true. Swift.

4. To instil; to infuse gently.

All the art of rhetoric, besides order and clearness, are for nothing else but to insinuate wrong ideas, move the passions, and thereby mislead the judgment. Locke.

TO INSINUATE. v. n.

1. To wheedle; to gain on the affections by gentle degrees.

I love no colours; and without all colour
Of base insinuating flattery,
I lack this white rose with Plantagenet. Shakspeare.

2. To steal into imperceptibly; to be conveyed insensibly.

Pestilential miasms insinuate into the humors and constituent parts of the body. Harvey.

3. I know not whether Milton does not use this word, according to its etymology, for, to enfold; to wreath; to wind.

Close the serpent fly
Insinuating, of his fatal guile Gave proof unheeded. Milton.

INSINUATION. n. f. [insinuatio, Latin; insinuation, French; from insinuate.] The power of pleasing or stealing upon the affections.

When the industry of one man hath settled the work, a new man, by insinuation or misinformation, may not supplant him without a just cause. Russet.

He had a natural insinuation and address, which made him acceptable in the best company. Clarendon.

INSINUATIVE. adj. [from insinuate.]

Stealing on the affections.

It is a strange insinuating power which example and custom have upon us. Government of the Tongue.

He that insinuates. Ainsworth.

INSIPID. adj. [insipide, French; insipidus, Latin.]

1. Wanting taste; wanting power of affecting the organs of gust.

Some earths yield, by distillation, a liquor very fat from being inodorous or insipid. Boyle.
Our fathers much admind their sauces sweet,
And often call'd for sugar with their meat;
Insipid taste, old friend, to them that Paris knew,
Where rucumbole, shallot, and the rank garlick grew. King.

This chyle is the natural and alimentary piquits, which the ancients described as insipid. Flores on the Humours.

She lays some useful bile aside,
To tinge the chyle's insipid tide. Prior.

2. Wanting spirit; wanting pathos; flat; dull; heavy.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Protemy;
A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'erlays your fire. Dryden.
Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryden.

INSIPIDITY. n. f. [insipidité, French; from insipid.]

INSIPIDNESS. n. f. [from insipid.]

1. Want of taste.

Were there no other act of hostility but that which we have hitherto insisted on, the intercepting of her supplies were irreparably injurious to her. Decay of Piety.

INSISTENT. adj. [insistens, Latin.] Resting upon any thing.

The breadth of the substruction must be at least double to the insistent wall. Hutton.

INSISTURE. n. f. [from insist.] This word seems in Shakspeare to signify constancy or regularity, but is now not used.

The heavens themselves, the planets, and the center,

Observe degree, priority, and place,
Sustance, course, proportion, season, form,
Office and custom, in all line of order. Shakspeare.

INSISTENCY. n. f. [in and sisto, Latin.]

Exemption from thirst.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for the use we make of him? The docility of an elephant, and the insistency of a camel for travelling in deserts. Grew.

INSITION. n. f. [insitio, Latin.] The insertion or ingraftment of one branch into another.

Without the use of these we could have nothing of culture or civility: no tillage, grafting, or insition. Ray.

TO INSINARE. v. a. [in and snare.]

1. To intrap; to catch in a trap, gin, or snare; to inveigle.

Why strew'st thou sugar on that horrid spider,
Whose deadly web insinarteth thee about? Shakspeare.
She insinarteth

Mankind with her fair looks. Milton.

By long experience Dursey may no doubt Insinarteth a gudgeon, or perhaps a trout;
Though Dryden once exclaim'd in partial spite;
He fish!—because the man attempts to write. Fenton.

2. To entangle in difficulties or perplexities.

That which in a great part, in the weightiest causes belonging to this present controversy, hath insinarteth the judgments both of sundry good and of some well learned men, is the manifest truth of certain general principles, whereupon the ordinances that serve for usual practice in the church of God are grounded. Hobbes.

That the hypocrite reign not, kill the people be insinarteth. Job.

3. Ensnare is more frequent.

INSINARE. n. f. [from insinarteth.] He that insinarteth.

If this austere insociable life
Change not your offer made in heat of blood. Shakspeare.

2. Incapable of connexion or union.

The lowest ledge or row must be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar, which is a general caution for all parts in building that are contiguous to board or timber, because time and wood are insociable. Weston's Architecture.

INSOBRIETY. n. f. [in and sobriety.]

Drunkennes; want of sobriety.

He whose conscience upbraids him with profaneness towards God, and insobriety towards himself, if he is just to his neighbour, he thinks he has quit scores. Decay of Piety.

TO INSOLATE. v. a. [insolo, Latin.]

To dry in the sun; to expose to the action of the sun.

INSOLATION. n. f. [insolation, French; from insolate.] Exposition to the sun.

We use these towers for insolation, refraction, conservation, and for the view of divers meters. Hutton.

If it have not a sufficient insolation it looketh pale, and attains not its laudable colour; it is be sunned too long, it suffereth a tansolation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INSOLENCE. } n. f. [insolence, French; insolentia, Lat.] Pride exerted in contemptuous and overbearing treatment of others; petulant contempt.

They could not restrain the insolency of O'Neal, who, finding none now to withstand him, made himself lord of those people that remained. Spenser on Ireland.

Such a nature
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon; but I do wonder
His insolence can brook to be commanded Under Cominius. Shakespeare.

Blown with insolence and wine. Milton.
Publick judgments are the banks and shores upon which God breaks the insolency of sinners, and slays their proud waves. Tillotson.

The steady tyrant man,
Who with the thoughtless insolence of power,
For sport alone, pursues the cruel chase. Thomson.
The fear of any violence, either against her own person or against her son, might deter Penelope from using any endeavours to remove men of such insolence and power. Brown.

INSOLENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To insult; to treat with contempt. A very bad word.

The bishops, who were first faulty, insolenced and afflicted. King Charles.

INSOLENT. adj. [insolent, French; insolens, Latin.] Contemptuous of others; haughty; overbearing.

We have not pillaged those rich provinces which we rescued: victory itself hath not made us insolent masters. Atterbury.

INSOLENTLY. adv. [insolenter, Latin.] With contempt of others; haughtily; rudely.

What I must disprove,
He insolently talk'd to me of love. Dryden.
Not faction, when it shook thy regal fear,
Nor sonates, insolently loud,
Those echoes of a thoughtless crowd,
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree. Dryden.
Briant, naturally of an haughty temper, treated him very insolently, more like a criminal than a prisoner of war. Addison.

INSOLVABLE. adj. [insolvable, French; in solvibile, Latin.]

1. Not to be solved; not to be cleared; inextricable; such as admits of no solution, or explication.

Spend a few thoughts on the puzzling enquiries concerning vacuums, the doctrine of infinites, indivisibles, and incommensurables, wherein there appear some insolvable difficulties. Watts on the Mind.

2. That cannot be paid.

INSOLUBLE. adj. [insoluble, French; insolubilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be cleared; not to be resolved. Admit this, and what shall the scripture be but a snare and a torment to weak consciences, filling them with infinite scrupulosities, doubts, insoluble, and extreme despair. Hunter.

2. Not to be dissolved or separated. Stony matter may grow in any part of a human body; for when any thing insoluble sticks in any part of the body, it gathers a crust about it. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INSOLVENT. adj. [in and solvo, Latin.] Unable to pay.

By public declaration he proclaimed himself insolvent of those vast sums he had taken upon credit. Houel.

A farmer accused his guards for robbing him of oxen, and the emperor shot the offenders; but demanding reparation of the accuser for so many brave fellows, and finding him insolvent, compounded the matter by taking his life. Addison.

An insolvent is a man that cannot pay his debts. Watts.

INSOLVENCY. n. f. [from insolvent.] Inability to pay debts. An act of insolvency is a law by which imprisoned debtors are released without payment.

INSOLV'CH. conj. [in so much.] So that; to such a degree that. This word is growing obsolete.

It hath ever been the use of the conqueror to despise the language of the conquered, and to force him to learn his: so did the Romans always use, insomuch that there is no nation but is sprinkled with their language. Spenser.

To make ground fertile, ashes excel; insomuch as the countries about Aethia have amended made them, for the nitichiefs the eruptions do. Bacon's Natural History.

Simonides was an excellent poet, insomuch that he made his fortune by it. L'Estrange.

They made the ground uneven about their nest, insomuch that the state did not lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath. Addison.

TO INSPECT. v. a. [inspicio, inspectrum, Latin.] To look into by way of examination.

INSPECTION. n. f. [inspection, Fr. inspection, Latin.]

1. Prying examination; narrow and close survey.

With narrow search, and with inspection deep,
Consider every creature. Milton.

Our religion is a religion that dares to be understood; that offers itself to the search of the inquisitive, to the inspection of the severest and the most awakened reason; for, being secure of her substantial truth and purity, she knows that for her to be seen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to see it. South.

2. Superintendence; presiding care. In the first sense it should have into before the object; and in the second sense may admit over; but authors confound them.

We may safely conceal our good deeds, when they run no hazard of being diverted to improper ends, for want of our own inspection. Atterbury.

We should apply ourselves to study the perfections of God, and to procure lively and vigorous impressions of his perpetual presence with us, and inspection over us. Atterbury.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world, doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence. Bentley.

INSPECTOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A prying examiner.

With their new light our bold inspectors press,
Like Charm, to shew their father's nakedness. Denham.

2. A superintendent.

Young men may travel under a wise inspector or tutor to different parts, that they may bring home useful knowledge. Watts.

INSPESSION. n. f. [inspersio, Latin.] A sprinkling upon.

TO INSPESS. v. a. [in and sphaere.] To place in an orb or sphere.

Where those immortal shapes
Of bright aerial spirits live inspersed,
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton.

INSPIRABLE. adj. [from inspire.] Which may be drawn in with the breath; which may be infused.

To these inspirable burts, we may enumerate those that sustain from their expiration of fuliginous streams. Harvey.

INSPIRATION. n. f. [from inspire.]

1. The act of drawing in the breath.

In any inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot.

2. The act of breathing into any thing.

3. Infusion of ideas into the mind by a superiour power.

I never spoke with her in all my life.

—How can the then call us by our names,

Unless it be by inspiration? Shakespeare.

Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations. Shakespeare.

We to his high inspiration owe,

That what was done before the flood we know. Denham.

What the tragedian wrote, the late success

Declares was inspiration, and not guess. Denham.

Inspiration is when an overpowering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it: so were the prophets and the apostles inspired. Watts.

TO INSPIRE. v. a. [inspiro, Lat. inspirer, French.] To draw in the breath: opposed to expire.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stop'd, it suddenly yields to nature and dies. Walton.

TO INSPIRE. v. a.

1. To breathe into.

Ye nine, descend and sing,
The breathing instruments inspire. Pope.

2. To infuse by breathing.

He knew not his Maker, and he that inspired into him an active soul, and breathed in a living spirit. Wisdome.

3. To infuse into the mind; to impress upon the fancy.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;

But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shakespeare.

Then to the heart inspir'd

Vernal delight. Milton.

4. To animate by supernatural infusion.

Nor th' inspir'd

Castalian spring. Milton.

Esato, thy poet's mind inspire,

And fill his soul with thy celestial fire. Dryden.

The letters are often read to the young religious,

to inspire them with sentiments of virtue. Addison.

5. To draw in with the breath.

By means of sulphurous coal smoke the lungs are filled and oppressed, whereby they are forced to inspire and expire the air with difficulty, in comparison of the facility of inspiring and expiring the air in the country. Harvey.

His baleful breath inspiring as he glides;

Now like a chain around her neck he rides. Dryden.

INSPIRED. n. f. [from inspire.] He that inspires.

To the infinite God, the omnipotent creator and preserver of the world, the most gracious redeemer, sanctifier, and inspirer of mankind, be all honour. Denham.

TO INSPIRIT. v. a. [in and spirit.] To animate; to actuate; to fill with life and vigour; to enliven; to invigorate; to encourage.

It has pleased God to inspirit and actuate all his evangelical methods by a concurrence of supernatural strength, which makes it not only eligible but possible; easy and pleasant to do whatever he commands us. Decay of Piety.

A discreet use of becoming ceremonies renders the service of the church solemn and affecting, inspires the sluggish, and inflames even the devout worshipper. Atterbury.

The courage of Agamemnon is inspired by love of empire and ambition. Pope.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,
And the gay conscience of a life well spent,

*Give ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.*
TO INSPISSATE. v. a. [in and spissus,
Lat.] To thicken; to make thick.

Sugar doth inspissate the spirits of the wine, and maketh them not so easy to resolve into vapour. Bacon.

This oil farther inspissated by evaporation turns into balm. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

INSPISSATION. n. f. [from inspissate.]
The act of making any liquid thick.

The effect is wrought by the inspiration of the air. Bacon.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspiration, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbuthnot.

INSTABILITY. n. f. [instabilité, Fr. instabillitas, from instabilis, Lat.] Inconstan-cy; fickleness; mutability of opinion or conduct.

Instability of temper ought to be checked,
when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another; such a fickleness cannot but be fatal to our country. Addison.

INSTABLE. adj. [instabilis, Lat.] Inconstant; changing. See UNSTABLE.

TO INSTALL. v. a. [installer, Fr. in and stall.] To advance to any rank or office, by placing in the seat or stall proper to that condition.

She reigns a goddess now among the saints,
That whilom was the saint of shepherds light,
And is installed now in heaven's height. Spenser.

Cranmer is return'd with welcome,
Installed archbishop of Canterbury. Shakspeare.

The king chose him master of the horse, after this he was installed of the most noble order.

INSTALLATION. n. f. [installation, French;
from install.] The act of giving visible possession of a rank or office, by placing in the proper seat.

Upon the election the bishop gives a mandate for his installation. Atterbury's Parergon.

INSTALLMENT. n. f. [from install.]
1. The act of intalling.

Is it not easy
To make lord William Hastings of our mind,
For the installment of this noble duke
In the seat royal? Shakspeare.

2. The seat in which one is installed.
Search Windsor-castle, elves,
The several chairs of order look you fear;
Each false installment, cost and several craft
With loyal blazon evermore be dress'd! Shaksp.

INSTANCE. n. f. [instance, Fr.]

INSTANCY. n. f. [instance, Fr.]

1. Importunity; urgency; solicitation.
Christian men should much better frame themselves to those heavenly precepts which our Lord and Saviour with so great instancy gave us concerning peace and unity, if we did concur to have the ancient councils renewed. Hooker.

2. Motive; influence; pressing argument.
Not in use.

She dwells so securely upon her honour, that folly dares not present itself. Now, could I come to her with any direction in my hand, my desires had influence and argument to commend themselves. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The influences that second marriage move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love.

3. Prosecution or process of a suit.

The instance of a cause is said to be that judicial process which is made from the constitution of a suit, even to the time of pronouncing sentence in the cause, or till the end of three years.

4. Example; document.

Yet doth this accident
So far exceed all instance, all discourse,
That I am ready to distrust mine eyes. Shaksp.

In furnaces of copper and brass, where virriol is often cast in, there riseth suddenly a fly, which sometimes moveth on the walls of the furnace; sometimes in the fire below; and dieth presently as soon as it is out of the furnace: which is a noble instance, and worthy to be weighed. Bacon.

We find in history instances of persons, who, after their prisons have been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons, than stake their miserable lives and fortunes upon the success of a revolution. Addison.

The greatest saints are sometimes made the most remarkable instances of suffering. Atterbury.
Suppose the earth should be removed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury, the whole ocean would boil with heat.

The use of instances is to illustrate and explain a difficulty; and this end is best answered by such instances as are familiar and common. Baker.

5. State of any thing.

These seem as if, in the time of Edward the first, they were drawn up into the form of a law in the first instance. Hale.

6. Occasion; act.

The performances required on our part, are no other than what natural reason has endeavoured to recommend, even in the most severe and difficult instances of duty. Rogers.

A soul supreme in each hard instance try'd
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride. Pope.

If Eusebia has lived as free from sin as it is possible for human nature, it is because she is always watching and guarding against all instances of pride. Law's Serious Call.

TO INSTANCE. v. n. [from the noun.]

To give or offer an example.

As to false citations, that the world may see how little he is to be trusted, I shall instance in two or three about which he makes the loudest clamour. Tillotson.

In tragedy and satire, this age and the last have excell'd the ancients; and I would instance in Shakspeare of the former, in Dorset of the latter.

Dryden's Juvenal.

INSTANT. adj. [instant, Fr. instant,
Lat.]

1. Pressing; urgent; importunate; earnest.
And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. Luke.

Rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer. Romans.

2. Immediate; without any time intervening; present.

Our good old friend, bestow
Your needful counsel to our business;
Which crave the instant use. Shakspeare.

Th' instant stroke of death denounc'd to day,
Remov'd far off. Milton.

Nor native country thou, nor friend shalt see;
Nor war hast thou to wage, nor year to come;
Impending death is thine, and instant doom. Prior.

3. Quick; making no delay.

Instant without disturb they took alarm. Milton.

Griev'd that a visitant so long should wait
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate;
Instant he flew with hospitable haste,
And the new friend with courteous air embrac'd. Pope.

INSTANT. n. f. [instant, French.]

1. Instant is such a part of duration wherein we perceive no succession.

There is scarce an instant between their flourishing and their not being. Hooker.

Her nimble body yet in time must move,
And not in instants through all places slide;
But she is high and far, beneath, above,
In point of time, which thought cannot divide. Davies.

At any instant of time the moving atom is but in one single point of the line; therefore all but that one point is either future or past, and no other parts are co-existent or contemporary with it. Bentley's Sermons.

2. A particular time.

I can at any unreasonable instant of the night appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber window. Shakspeare.

3. It is used in low and commercial language for a day of the present or current month.

On the twentieth instant it is my intention to erect a lion's head. Addison's Guardian.

without any perceptible succession; acting with the utmost speed; done with the utmost speed.

This manner of the beginning or ceasing of the deluge doth not at all agree with the instantaneous actions of creation and annihilation. Burnet.

The rapid instantaneous strikes
Th' instantaneous mountain. Thomson.

INSTANTANEOUSLY. adv. [from instan-taneous.] In an indivisible point of time.

What I had heard of the raining of frogs came to my thoughts, there being reason to conclude that those came from the clouds, or were instantaneously generated. Derham.

INSTANTLY. adv. [instante, Latin.]

1. Immediately; without any perceptible intervention of time.

In a great whale, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transition throughout the whole body. Bacon.
Sleep instantly fell on me. Milton.

As several winds arise,
Just to their natures alter instantly. Milton.

2. With urgent importunity.

TO INSTATE. v. a. [in and state.]

1. To place in a certain rank or condition.
This kind of conquest does only instat the victor in these rights, which the conquered prince had. Hale.

Had this glistering monster been born to thy poverty, he could not have been so bad; nor, perhaps, had thy birth instated thee in the same greatness, wouldst thou have been better. Scott.

The first of them being eminently holy and dear to God, should derive a blessing to his posterity on that account, and prevail at last to have them also accepted as holy, and instated in the favour of God. Atterbury.

2. To invest. Obsolete.

For his possessions,
Although by confiscation they are ours,
We do instat and widow you wical. Shaksp.

INSTAURATION. n. f. [instauration, Fr.
instauration, Lat.] Restoration; reparation; renewal.

the coalition of in and stead, place.]

1. In room of; in place of.

They, instead of fruit,
Chew'd bitter ashes. Milton.

Vary the form of speech, and instead of the word church make it a question in politics, whether the monument be in danger. Swift.

2. Equal to.

Thus very consideration to a wife man is instead of a thousand arguments, to satisfy him, that, in those times, no such thing was believed.

Tillotson.

3. Instead is sometimes used without of.
In the place; in the room.

He in derision sits

Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raise Quite out their native language, and instead
To sow a jangling noise of tongues unknown. Milton.

TO INSTEAD. v. a. [in and stead.]

1. To soak; to macerate in moisture.

Suffolk first died, and York, all haggled over,
Comes to him where in gore he lay insleep'd.
Shakespeare.

mens sins; for a base notion of this black art will not carry him so far. South.

Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate,
When the mad people rise against the state,
To lock them into duty; and command
An awful silence with thy lifted hand. Dryden.

It concerns every man that would not trade away his soul, and find himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters. Tillotson.

He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of assiduous application. Smithridge.

In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue. Addison.

It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this means collected and brought into one mass. Woodward.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author; and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterbury.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be always frightening men into an acknowledgment of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence. Atterbury.

A man may whore and drink himself into atheism; but it is impossible he should think himself into it. Bentley.

INTOLERABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Latin; intolerable, French.]

1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be born; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.

If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable. Taylor.

His awful presence did the crowd surprise,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,
So fierce, they bath'd intolerable day. Dryden.

Some men are quickly weary of one thing;
The same study long continued in is as intolerable
to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes is to a court lady. Locke.

From Param's top th' Almighty rode, Intolerable day proclaim'd the God. Brown.

2. Bad beyond sufferance.

INTOLERABLENESS. n. f. [from intolerable.] Quality of a thing not to be endured.

INTOLERABLY. adv. [from intolerable.] To a degree beyond endurance.

INTOLERANT. adj. [intolerant, French.] Not enduring; not able to endure.

Two great misfortune affects human bodies with one class of diseases, and two great dryness with another; the powers of human bodies being limited and intolerant of excesses. Arbuthnot.

To INTOMB. v. a. [in and tomb.] To enclose in a funeral monument; to bury.

What commandment had the Jews for the ceremony of odours used about the bodies of their dead, after which custom notwithstanding our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intomb'd? Hosier.

Is't night's predominance or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb? Shakespeare.

Mighty heroes more majestic shades,
And youths intomb'd before their father's eyes. Dryden.

To INTONATE. v. a. [intono, Latin.] To thunder.

INTONATION. n. f. [intonation, Fr. from intonate.] The act of thundering. DiB.

To INTONE. v. n. [from intono, or rather from tone; intonner, French.] To make a flow protracted noise.

So twells each wind-pipe; as intones to as Harmonick twang. Pope's Dunciad.

To INTOIT. v. a. [intortuo, Lat.] To twist; to wreath; to wring.

The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits: and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intorted and wound up together. Arbuthnot.

With rev'rent hand the king presents the gold,
Which round th' intorted horns the gilder roll'd. Pope.

To INTOXICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Lat.] To inebriate; to make drunk.

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicates; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding, than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.

What part of wild fury was there in the bacchans which we have not seen equal'd, if not exceeded by some intoxicated zealots?

Decay of Piety.

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an uncessant desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. Dryden's Dufresny.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having different qualities from the plant; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbuthnot.

INTOXICATION. n. f. [from intoxicate.] Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Be on.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besetting intoxication which verbal magick brings upon the mind. South.

INTRAC'TABLE. adj. [intraçtabilis, Lat. intraitable, French.]

1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obdurate.

To love them who love us is so natural a passion, that even the most intraçtable tempers obey its force. Rogers.

2. Unmanageable; furious.

By what means serpents, and other noxious and more intraçtable kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, got together. Westward.

INTRAC'TABLY. adv. [from intraçtable.] Unmanageably; stubbornly.

INTRANQUILLITY. n. f. [in and tranquillity.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Factions were used for amusement, and allay in constant pain, and to relieve that intranquillity which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

INTRAN'SITIVE. adj. [intransitivus, Lat.] [In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object: as, curro, I run. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

INTRANSMUTABLE. adj. [in and transmutabile.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus. Ray on the Creation.

To INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their feeds
And weak beginnings he intreasur'd. Shaksp.

To INTRENCH. v. n. [in and trencher, Fr.] To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another: with on.

Little I desire my scepter should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. King Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man,
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.

To INTRENCH. v. a.
1. To break with hollows.
His face
Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton's Par. Lost

2. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

INTRENCHMENT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained: The intrenchment air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by anybody which had passed through it. Hammer. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As early may't thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakespeare.

INTRENCHMENT. n. f. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTREPID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Lat.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave. Argyle.

Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Teniet's dreadful field. Thompson.

INTREPIDITY. n. f. [intrepidité, French.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Gulliver's Travels.

INTREPIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.

INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Latin.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate.

His style was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

To INTRICATE. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.

INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

That variety of factions into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.

INTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRIGUE. n. f. [intrigue, French.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man,
These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flatman

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift

Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
And marriage grown a money league. Swift

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.
Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against them, the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope

- 2^o INTRIGUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs, commonly of love.

INTRIGUER. n. f. [intriguer, Fr. from intrigue.] One who bules himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I define that intriguer will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another. Addison INTRIGUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRINSECAL. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinseque, French.] This word is now generally written intrinsic, contrary to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsic goodness and equity of them, but by reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson

The near and intrinsic, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.
He falls into intrinsic society with Sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage. Hutton

INTRINSECALLY. a. adv. [from intrinsic.]

1. Internally; materially; really.

A lye is a thing absolutely and intrinsically evil. South

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsically and solidly valuable. Prior

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open attention; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsically. Hutton

If once bereaved of motion, matter cannot of itself acquire it again; nor is the result to form other body from without, or intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Keble

INTRINSICALLY. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsic.] Perplexed; entangled. Not in use.

Such smiling regions as that,
Like rays, all life the holy cords in twin,
Too intrinsical to untie. Shaksp. King Lear

Come, mortal wretch,
With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsical
Of life at once untie. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

INTRINSICK. adj. [intrinsecus, Latin.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsic goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hamersley

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.

The difference between worth and merit, strictly takes: that is, a man's intrinsic; thus, his current value. Grew

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis try'd
The more shall its intrinsic worth proclaim. Prior

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsic value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rogers

TO INTRODUCE. v. a. [introducere, Lat.] introduire, French.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.

Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke

2. To bring something into notice or practice.

This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preferring by theory as well as practice. Newton

An author who should introduce a sort of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Brown

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it. Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;
Intrust thy fortune to the powers above. Dryden.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword in Rome's defence, intrusted to our care? Addison.
He composed his last clause, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confidant. Arbuthnot.

INTUITION. n. f. [intuitus, intuor, Lat.]

1. Sight of any thing: used commonly of mental view. Immediate knowledge.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. Locke.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

INV

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is insensible. Glanville.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition. South.

He their single virtues did survey,
By intuition in his own large breast. Dryden.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitif, French.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of argument or testimony.

Immediate perception of the agreement and disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. Locke.

Lusty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstruse notions, or exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one person. Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. Hooker.

3. Having the power of discerning truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghoully or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth let them on work. Hooker.

The soul receives Discursive of intuitive. Milton.

INTUITIVELY. adv. [intuitivement, Fr.]

Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is sound and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the teacher of all men's hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his? Hooker.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Baker on Learning.

INTUMESCENCE. n. f. [intumescens, Lat.]

Swelling; tumour; the act or state of swelling.

According to the temper of the terrene parts at the bottom, as they are more hardy or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescence. Brown.

This fulcrum heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotion, and occasions an earthquake. Newton.

INTURGESCENCE. n. f. [in and turgescere, Lat.]

Swelling; the act or state of swelling.

Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescence caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

With dangerous expedition they invade Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault. Milton.

They race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall rear 'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden.

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. Dryden.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main. Dryden.

2. To attack; to assail; to assault.

There shall be contention among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings. Isaiah.

Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm
Invades us to the skin; to 'tisea thee;
But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt. Shakspeare, King Lear.

3. To violate by the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend.

Your lives are such, as they, not you, have made;
And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.

INVA'DER. n. f. [from invadere, Latin.]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another.

The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. Bacon.

Their piety
In sharp contest of battle found no aid Against invaders. Milton's Paradise Lost.

That knowledge, like the coal from the altar, serves only to enkindle and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Percy of Percy.

Were we lost, the naked empire
Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders. Denham.

The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders. Swift.

Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand;
Nor dread the bold invader's hand. Prior.

Esteem and judgment with strong fancy join,
To tell the fair invader in;
My darling favourite inclination, too,
All, all conspiring with the foe. Granville.

2. An assailant.

3. Encroacher; intruder.

The substance was formerly comprised in that uncompounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders. Hammond.

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment.

We made an invasion upon the Cherethites. 1 Sam.

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy. South.

The nations of th' Ausonian shore
Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar,
Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war. Dryden.

William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1066, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time 'till now, for one entire length of time, it shows at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes. Locke.

2. Attack of a disease.

What demonst'rate the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbutnot.

INVASIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other men's possessions; not defensive.

I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryden.

Let other monarchs, with invasive hands,
Lessen their people, and extend their lands;
By gasing nations hated and obey'd,
Lords of the deserts that their swords had made. Arbutnot.

INVECTIVE. n. f. [invektive, French; invektiva, low Latin.]

1. A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plan men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skillful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glosing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invektives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of christian duty. Hosker.

If we take satyr, in the general signification of the word, for an invektive, 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryd. Juv.

2. It is used with against.

So desp'rate thieves, all hopeles of their lives,
Breathe out invektives 'gainst the officers. Shaksp.
Casting off respect, he fell to utter invektives against the French king. Bacon's Hen. vii.

3. Lets properly with at.

Whilst we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invektives we make at their supposed errors fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Decay of Piety.

INVECTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.

Let him rail on; let his invektive muse
Have four and twenty letters to abuse. Dryden.

INVECTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abusively.

Thus most invektively he pierceth through
The body of the country, city, court, Yes, and of this our life; (wearing that we Are mere usurpers, tyrants. Shakspere.

TO INVEIGH. v. a. [inveibo, Lat.] 'To utter censure or reproach: with against.

I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

He inveighs severely against the folly of parties, in retaining scoundrels to retain their lies. Arbutnot.

INVEIGHER. n. f. [from inveigh.] Vehement railer.

One of these inveighers against mercury, in seven weeks, could not cure one small heapes in the face. Hijeman.

Minsbew; avengler, or enavengler, Fr. Skinner and Junius.] To persuade to something bad or hurtful; to wheedle; to allure; to seduce.

Must false Duesia, royal richly dight,
That easy was to inveigle weaker fight,
Was, by her wicked arts and wily skill,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might. Fairy Queen.

Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him. Shakspere.

Yet have they many baits and guileful spells,
To inveigle and invite th' unwary sense
Of them that pass unweeting by the way. Milton.

Both right able

T' inveigle and draw in the rabble. Hudibras.
Those drops of pretiness, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to exalt our conceptions, not inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking. Temple.

The inveigling a woman, before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old. Spektator.

INVEIGLER. n. f. [from inveigle.] Seducer; deceiver; allurer to ill.

Being presented to the emperor for his admirable beauty, the prince clapt him up as his inveigler. Saunders.

TO INVENT. v. a. [inventer, Fr. inventio, Lat.]

1. To discover; to find out; to excogitate; to produce something not made before.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, but must be received from God himself. Hosker.

By their count, which lovers books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains. Spens.
Matter of mirth enough, though those were none

She could devise, and thousand ways invent
To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment. Fairy Queen.

Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of mischief. Anon.

We may invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our enemies. Milton.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a twofold liquor is prepared for the inflection of their heads; both which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon. Ray.

Ye skillful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace,
By manag'd fire and late invented eyes, Blackmore.
But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,

When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts
employ'd,

And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Creech.
The ship, by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water. Arb.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.

I never did such things as those men have maliciously invented against me. Susannah.

Here is a strange figure invented, against the plain sense of the words. Stillingfleet.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her loathsome cave. Shaksp.
Hercules's meeting with Pleasure and Virtue was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the first dawns of philosophy. Addison's Spectator.

4. To light on; to meet with. Not used.

Far off he wonders what them makes so glad:
Or Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's stantick rites have made them mad. Spenser.

INVENTER. n. f. [from inventeur, Fr.]

1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.

As a translator, he was just; as an inventer, he was rich. Garth.

2. A forger.

INVENTION. n. f. [invention, French; inventio, Latin.]

1. Excogitation; the act or power of producing something new.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention! Shaksp.

By improving what was writ before,
Invention labours less, but judgment more. Roscommon.

Invention is a kind of muse, which, being possessed of the other advantages common to her sisters, and being warmed by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest. Dryden.

Mine is th' invention of the charming lyre:
Sweet notes and heavenly numbers I inspire. Dryden.

The chief excellence of Virgil is judgment, of Homer is invention. Pope.

2. Discovery.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate spittle from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called ductus salivales. Ray on the Creation.

3. Forgery; fiction.

We hear our bloody cousins, not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention. Shakspere

If thou can'st accuse,
Do it without invention suddenly. Shakspere.

4. The thing invented.

The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial inventions. Sidney.

Th' invention all admir'd; and each how he
To be th' inventor mis'd, so easy it seem'd Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought

Impossible. Milton's Paradise Lost.

INVENTIVE. adj. [inventif, French; from invent.]

1. Quick at contrivance; ready at expedients.

Those have the inventive heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

That inventive head

Her fatal image from the temple drew,

The sleeping guardians of the cattle flew. Dryden.

The inventive god, who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart.

Dryden.

2. Having the power of excogitation or fiction.

As he had an inventive brain, so there never lived any man that believed better thereof, and of himself. Raleigh.

Reason, remembrance, wit, inventive art,
No nature, but immortal, can impart. Denham.

INVENTOR. n. s. [inventor, Latin.]

1. A finder out of something new. It is written likewise inventor.

We have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies, also the inventor of ships: your Monk, that was the inventor of ordnance, and of gunpowder. Bacon.

Studious they appear

Of arts that polish life; inventors rare,
Unmindful of their maker. Milton.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author and inventor, and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterbury.

2. A contriver; a framer. In an ill sense.

In this upbraid, purposes mislook,
Fall'n on th' inventor heads. Shakespeare.

To divide inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetic of memory. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

INVENTORY. n. s. [inventaire, Fr. inventarium, Latin.] An account or catalogue of moveables.

I found,

Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate. Shakespeare.

The channels that afflict us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance: our sufferings is a gain to them.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Whoe'er looks,

For themselves dare not go, o'er Cheapside books,

Shall find their wardrobe's inventory. Donne.

It were of much consequence to have such an inventory of nature, wherein, as, on the one hand, nothing should be wanting, so nothing repeated on the other. Grew's Museum.

In Persia the daughters of Eve are reckoned in the inventory of their goods and chattels; and it is usual, when a man sells a bale of silk, to roll half a dozen women into the bargain.

Addison.

TO INVENTORY. v. a. [inventorier, Fr.]

To register; to place in a catalogue.

I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labell'd. Shakespeare.

A man looks on the love of his friend as one of the richest possessions: the philosopher thought friends were to be inventoried as well as goods. Government of the Tongue.

INVENTRESS. n. s. [inventrice, French; from inventor.] A female that invents.

VOL. I.

The arts, with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified. Barnet.

Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame;

The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,

Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds. Dryden.

INVERSE. adj. [inverse, French; inversus, Latin.] Inverted; reciprocal: opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.

Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter, and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance. Garth.

INVERSION. n. s. [inversion, French; inversio, Latin.]

1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last.

If he speaks truth, it is upon a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it. Brown.

'Tis just the inversion of an act of parliament: your lordship first signed it, and then it was passed among the lords and commons. Dryden.

2. Change of place, so that each takes the room of the other.

TO INVERT. v. a. [inverso, Latin.]

1. To turn upside down; to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.

With fate inverted, shall I humbly woo?
And some proud prince, in wild Numidia born,
Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn! Walter.

Ask not the cause why fullen spring
So long delays her flow'rs to bear,
And winter storms invert the year. Dryden.

Poesy and oratory omit things essential, and invert times and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light. Watts.

2. To place the last first.

Yes, every poet is a fool;

By demonstration Ned can show it:

Happy, could Ned's inverted rule

Prove every fool to be a poet. Prior.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to embezzle. Instead of this convert or invert is now commonly used.

Solyman charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies. Knelley.

INVERTEDLY. adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.

Placing the forefront of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landscape of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye. Derham.

TO INVE'ST. v. a. [investir, French; investire, Latin.]

1. To dress; to clothe; to array. It has in or with before the thing superinduced or conferred.

Their gesture sad,
Invest in lank lean cheeks and war-worn coats,
Presented them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghasts. Shakespeare.

Thou with a mantle didst invest

The rising world of waters. Milton.

Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;

Invest them with thy loveliest smiles, put on Thy choicest looks. Denham's Scyph.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make places of publick resort, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hobbes.

After the death of the other archbishop, he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth. Clarendon.

The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with publick authority. Atterbury.

3. To adorn; to grace: as clothes or ornaments.

Honour must,

Not accompanied, invest him only;

But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine

On all deserving. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The foolish, over-careful fathers for this enormous

The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold;

For this they have been thoughtful to invest

Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Stat.

Some great potentate,

Or of the thrones above; such majesty

Invests him coming. Milton.

4. To confer; to give.

If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it invests a right of government. Bacon.

5. To enclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.

INVESTIENT. adj. [investiens, Latin.]

Covering; clothing.

The shells served as platforms or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated and freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

INVESTIGABLE. adj. [from investigate.]

To be searched out; discoverable by rational disquisition.

Finally, in such sort they are investigable, that the knowledge of them is general; the world hath always been acquainted with them. Hobbes.

In doing evil, we prefer a less good before a greater, the greatness whereof is by reason investigable, and may be known. Hobbes.

TO INVESTIGATE. v. a. [investigo, Latin.]

To search out; to find out by rational disquisition.

Investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs for articulation. Hobbes.

From the present appearances investigate the powers and forces of nature, and from these account for future observations. Chrys.

INVESTIGATION. n. s. [investigation, Fr.

investigatio, Latin.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.

Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synethick or analytick. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought Investigation calm, whole silent powers Command the world. Thomson's Summer.

2. Examination.

Your travels I hear much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories. Pope.

INVESTITURE. n. s. [French.]

1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.

He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Ruleg.

2. The act of giving possession.

INVESTMENT. n. s. [in and vestment.]

Dress; clothes; garment; habit.

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
Not of that die which their inventions shew.

Shakespeare.

You, my lord archbishop,
Whole see is by a civil peace maintained, Whole beard the silver hand of peace hath
touch'd,

Whole learning and good letters peace hath
touch'd,

Whole white inventions figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you to ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,

Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war?
Shakespeare.

INVE'TERACY. n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.]

1. Long continuance of any thing bad;
obstinacy confirmed by time.

The inveteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them.

Addison.

2. [In physick.] Long continuance of a disease.

INVETERATE. adj. [inveteratus, Lat.]

1. Old; long established.

The custom of christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing; the very inveterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could shew some higher law, some law of scripture, to the contrary.

Hooker.

It is an inveterate and received opinion, that cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder, and exulcerate it.

Bacon.

2. Obsolete by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit; but it must be a long inveterate course and custom of sinning, that at length produces and ends in such a curded effect.

South.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease.

Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow inveterate, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies.

Swift.

To INVE'TERATE. v. a. [inveterer, Fr. invetero, Latin.] To fix and settle by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient vain expectation, which had by tradition been infused and invete-rated into men's minds.

Bacon.

Let not atheists lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inveterated habit.

Bentley.

INVE'TERATENESS. n. f. [from inveterate.] Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath reuced him more perfect in the art, so hath the inveterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution.

Brown.

Neither the inveterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalence of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words.

Locke.

INVETERATION. n. f. [inveteratio, Lat.]
The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVIDIOUS. adj. [invidiosus, Latin.]

I shall open to men the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reling.

Evans.

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred.

This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes.

Brown.

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, there are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals.

Swift.

INVIDIOUSLY. adv. [from invidious.]

1. Malignantly; enviously.

2. In a manner likely to provoke hatred.

The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy.

Sprat.

INVIDIOUSNESS. n. f. [from invidious.]

Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

To INVIGORATE. v. a. [in and vigour.]

To endue with vigour; to strengthen;
to animate; to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate.

Brown.

Gentle warmth
Discloseth well the earth's all-terming womb,
Invigorating tender seeds.

Philips.

I have lived when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, assumed a power of dispensing with them.

Addison.

No one can enjoy health, without he feel a lighthearted and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action.

Speator.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be,
unless fed, invigorated, and animated by universal charity.

Atterbury.

INVIGORATION. n. f. [from invigorate.]

1. The act of invigorating.

2. The state of being invigorated.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty, which is always in the very height of activity and invig-oration.

Norris.

INVINCIBLE. adj. [invincible, French;
invincibilis, Latin.]

Insufferable; unconquerable; not to be subdued.

I would have thought her spirits had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

Shaksp.

Should he invade their country, he would soon see that invincible nation with their united forces up in arms.

Knoles.

The spirit remains invincible.

Milton.

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible error, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgment.

Locke.

If an atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with his insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have held out a thousand years in a perpetual debauch.

Bentley.

INVINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from invincible.] Unconquerableness; insuperableness.

INVINCIBLY. adv. [from invincible.]

Insufferably; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause;
And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done

Invincibly.

Milton.

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impeded, to apply them to their benefit.

Deay of Risty.

INVOLABLE. adj. [inviolable, Fr.
inviolabilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account

To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep

This place inviolable, and these from harm.

In vain did nature's wife command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men prophane,

Invalidate th' inviolable main;

Th' eternal fences overleap,

And pass at will the boundless deep.

Ye lamps of heav'n, he said, and lifted high

His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!

Dryden.

Invincible pow'rs! stor'd with dread,

Be all of you adjur'd.

Dryden.

This birthright, when our author pleases, must and must not be fact'd and inviolable.

Locke.

2. Not to be broken.

The prophet Davis thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity.

Hooker.

See, see, they join embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd to be league inviolable.

Shaksp.

3. Insusceptible of hurt or wound.

Th' inviolable saints

In cubick phalanx firm advanc'd intire.

Milton.

INVIO'LABLY. adv. [from inviolable.]

Without breach; without failure.

More acquaintance you have none; you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours.

Dryden.

The true profession of christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men.

Sprat.

INVIO'LABE. adj. [inviolate, French; inviolatus, Latin.] Unhurt; uninjured; un-profaned; unpolluted; unbroken.

His fortune of arms was still inviolate.

Bacon.

But let inviolate truth be always dear

To thee, even before friendship, truth prefer.

Denham.

If the past

Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds
Nature has seal'd between us, which, though I Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd inviolate;

Denham's Supp.

I beg thy pardon.

My love your claim inviolate secures;

'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours.

Dryden.

In all the changes of his doubtful state,

His truth, like heav'n's, was kept inviolate.

Dryden.

INVIO'US. adj. [invius, Latin.] Impassible; untrodden.

If nothing can oppugn his love,
And virtue invius ways can prove,
What may not be confide to do,
That brings both love and virtue too?

Hudibras.

To INVISCATE. v. a. [in and viscus, Lat.]
To lime; to entangle in glutinous matter.

The camelion's food being flies, it hath in the tongue a mucous and slimy extremity, whereby, upon a sudden omission, it inviscates and intangleth those insects.

Brown.

INVISIB'ILITY. n. f. [invisibilité, French;
from invisible.] The state of being invisible; imperceptibleness to sight.

They may be demonstrated to be unnumberable, substituting their smallness for the reason of their invisibilty.

Rap.

INVIS'BLE. adj. [invisible, Fr. invisibilis, Lat.] Not perceptible by the sight; not to be seen.

He was invisible that hurt me so;

And none invisible, but spirits, can go.

The threaten tails,

Borne with th' invisible and creeping wind,

Drew the huge bottoms to the narrow'd sea.

Shakspere.

'Tis wonderful,

That an invisible instinct should frame them

To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untaught.

To us invisible, or dimly seen,

In these thy lowest works.

He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen.

It seems easier to make our's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself.

Locke.

INVIS'IBLY. adv. [from invisible.] Imperceptibly to the sight.

One death involves Thou'son's Summer.

Age by degrees invisibly doth creep,
Nor do we seem to die, but fall asleep. Denn.
INVITATION. n. f. [invitation, Fr. invitatio, Lat.] The act of inviting, bidding, or calling to any thing with ceremony and civility.

That other answer'd with a lowly look,
And soon the gracious invitatio took. Dryd.

INVITATORY. adj. [from invito, Lat.] Using invitation; containing invitation.

TO INVITE. v. a. [invito, Latin; inviter, French.]

1. To bid; to ask to any place, particularly to one's own house, with intreaty and complaisance.

If thou be invited of a mighty man, withdraw thyself.
He comes invited by a younger son.
When much company is invited, then be as sparing as possible of your coin. Swift.

2. To allure; to persuade; to induce by hope or pleasure.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other gentiles, though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

Nor art thou such Created, or such place hath here to dwell,
As may not yet invite, though spirits of heav'n,
To visit thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The liberal contributions such teachers met
With, served still to invite more labourers into that work. Decay of Piety.

Shady groves, that easy sleep invite,
And after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden's Virgil.

TO INVITE. v. n. [invito, Latin.] To ask or call to any thing pleasing.

All things invite
To peaceful counsels. Milton.
INVITER. n. f. [from invito.] He who invites.

They forcibly cut out abortive votes, such as their inviters and encouragees most fancied.

Honour was the aim of the guests, and interest was the scope of the invites. Southey.
Wines and cups the tables grace,
But most the kind inviter's cheerful face. Pope.

INVITINGLY. adv. [from inviting.] In such a manner as invites or allures.

If he can but dress up a temptation to look invitingly, the business is done. Decay of Piety.

TO INUMBRATE. v. a. [inumbro, Lat.] To shade; to cover with shades. Ditt.

INUNCTION. n. f. [inungo, inunctus, Lat.] The act of smearing or anointing.

The wife author of nature hath placed on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily liniment, for the inunction of the feathers, and causing their filaments to cohere. Ray.

INUNDATION. n. f. [inundation, French; inundatio, Latin.]

1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, says Cowley, implies less than deluge.

Her father counts it dangerous,
That she would give her sorrow so much sway;
And in his wisdom hinders our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakespeare.

The same inundation was not past fifty foot in most places: so that some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

All fountains of the deep,
Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, till inundation rise Above the highest hills. Milton's Par. Lost.

This inundation unto the Egyptians happeneth when it is winter unto the Ethiopians. Brown.

Your care about your hanks infers a fear
Of threatening floods, and inundations near. Dryden.

No swelling inundation hides the grounds,
But crystal currents glide within their bounds. Gay.

2. A confluence of any kind.

Many good towns, through that inundation of the Irish, were utterly wasted. Spenser.

TO INVOCATE. v. a. [invoco, Latin.]

To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Be't lawful, that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shaks.

If Dagon be thy god,
Go to his temple, invoke his aid
With solemn devotion. Milton's Agonistes.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
Till vermin or the draft of servile food
Consume me, and oft invoked death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton's Agonistes.

INVOCATION. n. f. [invocation, French; invocatio, Latin.]

1. The act of calling upon in prayer.

Is not the name of prayer usual to signify even all the service that ever we do unto God? And that for no other cause, as I suppose, but that there is in religion no acceptable duty, which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either presuppose or infer. Hooker.

2. The form of calling for the assistance or presence of any being.

My invocation is Honest and fair, and in his mistress' name. Shakespeare.

The proposition of Gratius is contained in a line, and that of invocation in half a line. Wise.
I will strain myself to breathe out this invocation. Howell.

The whole poem is a prayer to fortune, and the invocation is divided between the two deities. Addison on Italy.

INVOICE. n. f. [This word is perhaps corrupted from the French word envoyer, send.] A catalogue of the freight of a ship, or of the articles and price of goods sent by a factor.

TO INVOKE. v. a. [invoco, Latin; invoker, French.] To call upon; to implore; to pray to; to invoke.

The power I will invoke dwells in her eyes. Sidney.

One peculiar nation to select
From all the rest of whom to be invoked. Milton.

The skilful bard,
Striking the Thracian harp, invokes Apollo,
To make his hero and himself immortal. Prior.

TO INVOLVE. v. a. [involvero, Latin.]

1. To inwrap; to cover with any thing circumfluent.

Leave a singled bottom all involved
With stench and smoke. Milton.

No man could mix his way to heaven for want of light; and yet so vain are they as to think they oblige the world by involving it in darkness. Decay of Piety.

In a cloud involved, he takes his flight,
Where Greeks and Trojans mix'd in mortal fight. Dryden.

2. To imply; to comprise.

We cannot demonstrate these things so as to show that the contrary necessarily involves a contradiction. Tillotson.

3. To intertwist; to join.

He knows his end with mine involved. Milton.

4. To take in; to catch; to conjoin.

The gathering number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng. Pope.
Sin we should hate altogether; but our hatred of it may involve the person which we should not hate at all. Spenser.

Tyrants and slaves.

5. To entangle.

This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is so far from helping at all, that it only serves the more to involve us in difficulties. Locke.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men's reason. Locke.

6. To complicate; to make intricate.

Some involve'd their snaky folds.
Syllogism is of necessary use, even to the lovers of truth, to show them the fallacies that are often concealed in fluid, witty, or involved discourses. Locke.

7. To blend; to mingle together confusedly.

Earth with hell mingle and involve. Milton.

INVOLUNTARILY. adv. [from involutary.] Not by choice; not spontaneously.

INVOLUNTARY. adj. [in and voluntarius, Latin; involaire, French.]

1. Not having the power of choice.

The gathering number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who gently draw, and struggling left and left,
Roll in her vortex, and her power's conflicts. Pope.

2. Not chosen; not done willingly.

The forbearance of that action, consequent to such command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatsoever action is performed without such a thought of the mind, is called involuntary. Locke.

But why, ah tell me, ah too dear!
Steals down my cheek th' involuntary tear? Pope.

INVOLUTION. n. f. [involutio, Latin.]

1. The act of involving or inwrapping.

2. The state of being entangled; complication.

All things are mixed, and causes blended by mutual involutions. Glaucon.

3. That which is wrapped round any thing.

Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the silly-hew, sometimes found about the heads of children. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO INVOLVE. v. a. [in and ure.] To habituate; to make ready or willing by practice and custom; to accustom. It had anciently with before the thing practised, now to.

Because they so proudly insult, we must a little involve their ears with hearing how others, whom they more regard, are accustomed to use the same language with us. Hooker.

If there might be added true art and learning, there would be as much difference, in maturity of judgment, between men that were trained, and that which men men are, as between men that are now and innocents. Hooker.

That it may no painful work endure,
It so strong labour can itself involve. Hugh. Tale.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately involved to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor. Spenser.

The forward hand, inv'd to wounds, makes way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Daniel.

Then cruel, by their sports, to blood inv'd
Of fighting beasts, and men to beasts expos'd. Milton.

To involve

Our prompt obedience. Milton's Par. Lost.
They, who had been most inv'd to business, had not in their lives ever undergone so great fatigue for twenty days together. Clarissa.

We may involve ourselves by custom to bear the extremities of weather without injury. Addison's Guardian.

INUREMENT. n. f. [from inure.] Practice; habit; use; custom; frequency.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance a feverish appetite, and habitual inclination to the site it held, then how much more may education, being nothing else but a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature. Milton.

To INUREN. v. a. [in and urn.] To intomb; to bury.

The sepulchre
Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,
Hail: op'd its ponderous and marble jaws
To cut thee up again. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Amidst the tears of Trojan dames inurn'd,
And by his loyal daughters truly mourn'd. Dryd.

INUSTION. n. f. [inustio, Latin.] The act of burning.

INUTILE. adj. [inutile, Fr. inutilis, Lat.] Useless; unprofitable.

To refer to heat and cold is a compendious and inutile speculation. Bacon's Nat. History.

INUTILITY. n. f. [inutilité, Fr. inutilitas, Latin.] Uselessness; unprofitableness.

INVULNERABLE. adj. [invulnerable, Fr. invulnerabilis, Lat.] Not to be wounded; secure from wound.

Our cannon's malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shakspeare.
Nor vainly hope

To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
That mortal dust none can resist. Milton.
Vanilla, though by Pallas taught,
By love invulnerable thought,
Searching in books for widows' aid,
Was in the very search betray'd. Swift.

To INWA'LL. v. a. [in and wall.] To enclose or fortify with a wall.

Three such towns in those places with the garrisons, would be so augmented as they would be able with little to inwall themselves strongly.
Spenser on Ireland

INWARD. } adv. [inward, Saxon.]

INWARDS. } adv. [inward, Saxon.]

1. Toward the internal parts; within.
The parts of living creatures that be more inwards, nourish more than the outward flesh. Bacon's Natural History.

The medicines which go to these magical ointments are so strong, that if they were used inwards they would kill; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

2. With inflection or incurvity; con-cavely.

He stretches out his arm in sign of peace, with his breast bending inward. Dryden.

3. Into the mind or thoughts.

Looking inward we are stricken dumb;
looking upward we speak and prevail. Hocker.

Celestial light Shine inwards, and the soul through all her powers. Milton.

INWARD. adj.

1. Internal; placed not on the outside but within.

He could not rest, but did his stout heart eat,
And wait his inward guilt with deep delight. Fairy Queen

To each inward part

It shoots invisible. Milton.

Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure more plainly. Pope.

2. Reflecting; deeply thinking.

With outward looks their face they receive'd
But beat and inward to myself again
Perplex'd, these matters I resolv'd, in vain. Pope.

3. Intimate; domestic; familiar.

Though the lord of the liberty do pain himself all he may to yield equal justice unto all, yet can there not but great acquiescence in so inward and absolute a privilege. Spenser.

All my inward friends abhorred me. Job.

4. Seated in the mind.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shakspeare.

INWARD. n. f.

1. Any thing within, generally the bowels. Seldom has this sense a singular.

Then sacrificings, laid
The inwards, and their fat, with incense strow'd
On the clef wood, and all due rites perform'd. Milton.

They esteem them most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon their inwards. Mortimer.

2. Intimate; near acquaintance. Little used.

Sir, I was an inward of his; a sly fellow was the duke; and I know the cause of his withdrawing. Shakspeare.

INWARDLY. adv. [from inward.]

1. In the heart; privately.

That which inwardly each man should be,
the church outwardly ought to testify. Hooker.
I bleed inwardly for my lord. Shakspeare.

Mean time the king, though inwardly he mourn'd,
In pomp triumphant to the town return'd,
Attended by the chiefs. Dryden.

2. In the parts within; internally.

Let Benedick, like covered fire,
Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly. Shakspeare.
Cantharides he prescribes both outwardly and inwardly. Arbutnot.

3. With inflection or concavity.

INWARDNESS. n. f. [from inward.] Intimacy; familiarity.

You know my inwardness and love
Is very much unto the prince and Claudio. Shakspeare.

To INWEAVE. pret. inwove or inwaved, part. pass. inwove, inwoven, or in-waved. [in and weave.]

1. To mix any thing in weaving, so that it forms part of the texture.

A fair border, wrought of sundry flowers,
Inwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser.
Down they cast
Their crowns, inwove with amaranth and gold. Milton.

And o'er soft paths of purple grain unfold
Rich tap'ry, stuff'd with amaranth gold. Pope.

the ladies lost the marking his sportfulness. Shakspeare.

To INWRAP. v. a. [in and wrap.]

1. To cover by involution; to involve.

And over them Arachne high did sit
Her cunning webbs, and spread her subtil net, Inwoven in foul inuok. Fairy Queen.

This, my amber drop inwrap a bee,
Covering discovers your quick soul; that we May in your through-thine front our hearts thoughts see. Donne.

2. To perplex; to puzzle with difficulty or obscurity.

The case is no sooner made than inwoven: if it be made not inwoven, but plainly and perspicuously. Bacon.

3. It is doubtful whether the following examples should not be inrap, or inrap, from in and rap, rapio, Latin, to ravish or transport.

This pearl she gave me I do feel 't and see 't;
And though 'tis wonder that inwrap me thus,
Yet 'tis not madness. Shakspeare.

For if such holy song
Entwrap our fancy long,
Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold. Milton.

INWROUGHT. adj. [in and wrought.]
Adorned with work.

Camus, revolved fir, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy and his bonnet fedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscrib'd with woe. Milton.

To INWREATH. v. a. [in and wreath.]
To surround as with a wreath.

Bind their resplendent locks inwreath'd with beams. Milton.

Nor less the palm of peace inwreathes thy brow. Thomson.

use, of which I cannot tell the etymology.]

1. Petty, piddling work; a piece of chance work.

2. A low mean lucrative busy affair.

He was now with his old friends, like an old favourite of a cunning miser after the job is over. Arbutnot.

No check is known to blush, no heart to throbb,
Save when they lose a question, or a job. Pope.

Such puns as these never were granted with a view of being a job, for the interest of a particular person to the damage of the publick. Swift.

3. A sudden stab with a sharp instrument.

To JOB. v. a.

1. To strike suddenly with a sharp instrument.

As an ass with a galled back was feeding in a meadow, a raven pitched upon him, and sat jobbing of the loss. L'Estrange.

2. To drive in a sharp instrument.

Let peacocks and turkey leave jobbing their
hex. Taylor.

The work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, draw or job the edge into the stuff. Mason.

to buy and sell as a broker.

The judge shall job, the bishop bite the town,
And mighty dukes pack cards for half a crown. Pope.

JOB'S tears. n. f. An herb. Answorth.

JOBBER. n. f. [from job.]

1. A man who sells stock in the publick funds.

So call it in the southern seas,
And view it through a jobber's bill;
Put on what spectacles you please,
Your guinea's but a guinea still. Swift.

2. One who does chance work.

JOBBERNO'WL. n. f. [most probably from jobbe, Flemish, dull, and nowl, hool, Saxon, a head.] Loggerhead; block-head.

And like the world, men's jobberno'wls
Turn round upon their ears, the poles. Hudibras.

JOCKEY. n. f. [from Jack, the diminutive of John, comes Jockey, or as the Scotch, Jockey, used for any boy, and particularly for a boy that rides race-horses.]

1. A fellow that rides horses in the race.

These were the wise ancients, who heaped up greater honours on Pindar's jockies than on the poet himself. Addison.

JOYFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.

If we no more meet till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu.

Shakspere.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to die;
With such clarity they bore away,
As if to praise them all the states stood by. Dryd.
The good christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Wake.

JOYFULNESS. n. f. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.

Thou servest not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things. Dru.

JOYLESS. adj. [from joy.]

1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.

A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless. Shakspere.
With downcast eyes the joyless victor sat,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below;
And now and then a sigh he dole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden's Alex. Feast.

IRE

2. It has sometimes of before the object.

With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;

She lik'd not his desire;
Fain would be free, but dreaded parents' ire. Sidney.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not stake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shakspere.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton.
The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only just object of his ire. Milton.

IRO

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to his fire. Dryden.

IRREFUL. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.

The irreful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encounter'd. Shaksp.
By many hands your father was subdu'd;

He that is of God, heareth God's words. John.

Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil; neither is it in them to do good. Jer.

My thought, whole murder yet; but fantastical,

Shakes to my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not. Shakespeare.

2. It is sometimes expressed by 's.

There 's some among you have beheld me fighting. Shakespeare.

ISCHIA'DICK. adj. [ischia, ischia; ischia, Fr.] In anatomy, an epithet to the crural vein; in pathology, the ischia passion is the gout in the hip, or the sciatica.

ISCHURE'TICK. n. f. [ischuretique, French; from ischury.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

ISCHURY. n. f. [ischuria, ischuria and ischuria, Latin; ischuria, French; ischuria, Lat.] A stoppage of urine, whether by gravel or other cause.

ISH. [is, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality: as, bluish, tending to blue; brightish, somewhat bright.

2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentile or possessive adjective: as, Swedish, Danish; the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added: as, foolish, foolishly; manly, manly; rogue, roguishly.

ISICLE. n. f. [more properly icicle, from ice; but ice should rather be written ife; isr, Saxon.] A pendent shoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?

—The moon of Rome? chaste as the isicle
That 's curdled by the frost from purest snow Hanging on Dian's temple. Shakespeare.

The frosts and snows her tender body spare;
Those are not limbs for isicles to tear. Dryden.

ISINGLASS. n. f. [from ice, or ife, and glass; ichthyocola, Lat.] A tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue.

The fish from which isinglass is prepared, is one of the cartilaginous kind: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and greatly resembles the sturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Boristhenes, the Volga, and the larger rivers of Europe. From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. Hill.

The cure of putrefaction requires an insatiable diet, as all vitid broths, tarrhens, ivory, and isinglass. Flyer.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ISINGLASS Stone. n. f. A fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Muscovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. Hill.

ISLAND. n. f. [insula, Latin; isola, Italian; caland, Erie. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,
An island shades it from the rolling sea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Island of bliss! amid' the subject seas. Thomson.

ISLANDER. n. f. [from island. Pronounced lander.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camden.

Your dinner, and the generous islander
By you invited, demand your presence. Shaks.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and inhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boist'rous as their seas;
The native islanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope.

ISLE. n. f. [isle, French; insula, Latin. Pronounced ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

The instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle. Shakespeare.

The dreadful fight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
Seas stain'd with gore I sing, adventurous toil,
And how these monsters did disarm an isle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aile, Fr. from ale, Latin, the aile being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from allée, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or public building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long sounding isles and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy fits. Pope.

ISOPERIMETRICAL. n. f. [isoperimetricus, Gr. isoperimetricus, Fr.] In geometry, are such figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISOCELES. n. f. [isofceles, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal. Harris.

ISSUE. n. f. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Psalmist.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are to be impoverished, in what condition must they have been, if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine issues. Shakespeare.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, were I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. Shakespeare.

But let the issue correspondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprise. Fairfax.

If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the atheist desires. Bentley.

4. Termination; conclusion.

He hath preferred Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

What issue of my love remains for me?
How wild a passion works within my breast!
With what prodigious flames am I possess'd! Dryden.

Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Broomer.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.

I am to pray you not to train my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakespeare's Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Weyman.

7. Evacuation.

A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. Mattaroso.

8. Progeny; offspring.

O nation miserable!

Since that the trust issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurs'd. Shaksp.
Nor where Absolin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True Paradise, under the Ethiop line
By Nilus' head. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This old peaceful prince, as Heav'n decreed,
Was blest'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryd.
The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. In law.

Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expenes of suit; sometimes for profits of lands or tenements; sometimes for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury.
Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be quæstio juris, or triable by the jury, if it be quæstio facti. Cowell.

To issue. v. n. [from the noun; issue,
French; uscire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Exek.
From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh's History.
Waters issu'd from a cave. Milton.

2. To make an eruption; to break out.

Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakspere.
See that none hence issue forth a spy. Milton.
Hail, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.

At length there iss'd, from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Strait issue through the sides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And sail their sails, and issue on the land. Pope.

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings.

4. To be produced by any fund.

These altars issu'd out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.

Pipes made with a belly towards the lower end,
and then issuing into a strait concave again. Bacon.
To issue. v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon.
The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temple.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense.
It is commonly followed by a particle,
out or forth.

If the council issu'd out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some noblemen published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands;

In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryd.
They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Issueless. adj. [from issue.] Having no offspring; wanting descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew.
I have done sin;

For which the Heav'n's, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Isthmus. n. f. [isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnablely fortified. Sundry's Travels.

The Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. Brerewood on Languages.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that dost proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet can'st not wave nor wind sustain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it.
Stillingfleet.

Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Cicero.
Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.

IT. pronoun. [Itz, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. For it, our ancestors used he, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they used his. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot stand by himself, but requireth another word to be joined with him to show his signification.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Brantail against Hobbes.

Will our great anger learn to stoop to low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who master art of it. Cowley.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm:
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flatman.

The time will come, it will, when you shall know. Dryden.

The rage of love. Dryden.

How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions? Locke.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabric began to melt.
Addison's Freeholder.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.

How is it with our general?
—Even so. Shakspere.

As with a man by his own aims impoison'd,
And with his charity slain. Shakspere.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter;
the affair.

It's come to pass,
That traſſable obedience is a slave
To each incedent will. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't;
He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching ſoe by nearer foot,
He liſted with ſuch might and ſtrength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Hudibras.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.

The Lacedæmonians, at the ſtraights of Ther-mopyla, when their arms fail'd them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often ſeen people lavish it profuſely in tricking up their children, and yet ſtave their minds. Locke.

The mole courſes it not on the ground, like the rat or mouſe, but lives under the earth. Spect.

Whether the charmer ſinner it, or ſaint it,
If folly grows romantic, I muſt paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludiccrouſly, or rudely to perſons.

Let us after him,
Whoſe care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerleſs kiſſman. Shakſpeare's Muchob.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shakſpeare's King Joh.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the use of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was 't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Macduff is ſled to England. Shaksp. Macbeth.

'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shaksp. Coriol.

'Tis thee that eaſily taint the female ſoul. Pope.

ITCH. n. f. [itcha, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised, as microscopes have discovered, by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrow of our youths,
That gainst the stream of virtue they may strive
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains. Shakspere's Timor.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou can'st not be healed. Drus.

As if divinity had catch'd
The itch on purpose to be scratch'd. Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teasing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon thieving. 1. F. Johnson.

He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.

From servants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.

At half mankind when ger'ous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue, for he thinks them knaves;
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.

ITE

A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wifeman.
My right eye itches; some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear. Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire.
This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.

Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.—
Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakespeare.

Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,
To feel and merit your offices for gold. Shaksp.
The itching ears, being an epidemic disease, gave fair opportunity to every mountebank.

Decay of Piety.
All such have still an itching to decide,
And fain would be upon the laughing side. Pope
ITCHY. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.

ITEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

ITEN. n. f.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tumbled by his side, and I to peruse him by item. Shakespeare.

2. A hint; an innuendo.

If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glanville.

To ITERATE. v. a. [itero, Latin.]

1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftener than any other part of scripture besides; the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone, to read them, as other parts of scripture he doth. Hooker.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest. Hooker.

The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon's Henry vii.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in concurrence, when the sound returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon.

2. To do over again.

Asbes burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown.

Adam took no thought,
Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate
Her former trespass fear'd, the more to soothe Him with her lov'd society. Milton's Par. Lost.

ITERANT. adj. [iterans, Lat.] Repeating.

Waters being near, make a current echo; but being further off, they make an iterant echo. Bacon's Natural History.

ITERATION. n. f. [iteration, Fr. iteratio, Lat.] Repetition; recital over again.

Truth tri'd with iteration
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon, Shaksp.

JUD

My husband!

—Ay, 'twas he that told me first.

—My husband!

—What needs this iteration, woman?

I say, thy husband.

Shakespeare's Othello.
Iterations are, commonly, lots of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chaleteth away many a frivolous speech. Bacon's Essays.

In all these respects, it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is further improved by the frequent iteration and repetition. Hammond.

ITERANT. adj. [iterant, Fr.] Wandering; not settled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of iterant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares. Addison's Spectator.

ITERINARY. n. f. [itinaire, Fr. itinerarium, Lat.] A book of travels.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom. Addison on Italy.

ITERINARY. adj. [itinaire, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it was rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress. Bacon.

ITSELF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

Who then shall blame

His pester'd senses, to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor. Locke.

JUBILANT. adj. [jubilans, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.

The planets listening stood,
While the bright pomp attended jubilant. Milt.

JUBILATION. n. f. [jubilatio, Fr. jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.

JUBILEE. n. f. [jubilé, Fr. jubilum, from jubilo, low Lat.] A public festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.

Angels utt'ring joy, heav'n rung
With jubilée, and loud hosannas filled
Th' eternal regions. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing, the recreation of the judgment, or rejoicing the jubilee of reason. South.

The town was all a jubilee of feasts. Dryden.

JUCUNDITY. n. f. [jucunditas, jucundus, Lat.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.

The new or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves, will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed tempers. Brown.

JUDAS TREE. n. f. [filiquastrum, Lat.] A plant.

Judas tree yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the spring, and is increased by layers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To JUDAIZE. v. n. [judaizer, Fr. judaizo, low Lat.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.

Paul judaiz'd with the Jews, was all to all. Sandys.

JUDGE. n. f. [juge, Fr. judex, Lat.]

1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.

Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? Genesis.

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation. Psalm.
Thou art judge

Of all things made, and judg'd only right. Milton.

JUD

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it. Shakespeare.

A single voice; and that not pass me, but
By learned approbation of the judge. Shakespeare.

How darest your pride,
As in a lifted field to fight your cause,
Unaid'd the royal grant; nor marital by,
As knightly rites require, not judge to try. Dryden.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully: it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art. Dryden.

3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.

One court there is in which he who knows the secrets of every heart will sit judge himself. Sherlock.

A perfect judge will read each piece of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.
To JUDGE. v. n. [juger, Fr. judico, Lat.]

1. To pass sentence.

My wrong be upon thee; the Lord judge between thee and me. Genesis.
Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. 2 Chron.

2. To form or give an opinion.

Renew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge aright. Shaksp.
Authors to themselves,
Both what they judge and what they chuse. Milton.

If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil, and which Ovid. Dryden.

Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.

He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely. Locke.

3. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately.

How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud? Jab.

Judge in yourselves: is it comely a woman pray unto God uncovered? 1 Cor.

How properly the toies may be called the whole body of the British nation, I leave to any one's judging. Addison.

To JUDGE. v. a.

1. To pass sentence upon; to examine authoritatively; to determine finally.

Curses shall judge the sinner. Milton.
Then those, whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when visitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

2. To pass severe censure; to doom severely. This is a sense seldom found but in the scriptures.

He shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies. Isaiah.
Judge not, that ye be not judged. Matthew.
Let no man judge you by meat or drink. Col.

JUDGER. n. f. [from judge.] One who forms judgment, or passes sentence.

The vulgar threatened to be their oppressors, and judgers of their judges. King Charles.

They who guide themselves merely by what appears, are ill judgers of what they have not well examined. Digby.

JUDGMENT. n. f. [judgement, French.]

1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.

O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason. Shakespeare.

The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgment, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be true or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs. Locke.

Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so this tree is high. Watts.

2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgment.

If my suspect be false, forgive me, God; For judgment only doth belong to thee. Shaksp.

3. The act of exercising judicature; judicatory.

They gave judgment upon him. 2 Kings.
When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclosed
In majesty severe,
And sit in judgment on my soul,
O how shall I appear? Addison's Spectator.

4. Determination; decision.

Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgment is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding. Glanville.
We shall make a certain judgment what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of. Barnet.
Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgment of things proposed to our inquiry. Watts.

5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.

Judgment, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man in the rapture of poetical composition. Dennis.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

6. Opinion; notion.

I see men's judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward Draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. Shaksp.
When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you. Shaksp.

7. Sentence against a criminal.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stir'd
With agony. Shaksp.
The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgment against him. Mt.
On Adam last this judgment he pronounced. Milton.

8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.

The judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. Romans.
The precepts, promises, and threatenings of the gospel will rise up in judgment against us, and the articles of our faith will be to many articles of accusation. Tillotson.

9. Punishment inflicted by providence, with reference to some particular crime.

This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble, Touches us not with pity. Shaksp. King Lear.
We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitableness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgments: it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance. Addison's Spectator.

10. Distribution of justice.

The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat. Acts.
Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shaksp.
In judgments between rich and poor, consider not what the poor man needs, but what is his own. Taylor.
A bold and wise petitioner goes straight to the throne and judgment seat of the monarch. Arbutnot and Pope.

11. Judiciary law; statute.

If ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant. Deuteronomy.

JUDICIALLY. adv. [from judicial.] In the forms of legal justice.

It will be of use to think that we see God still looking on, and weighing all our thoughts, words, and actions in the balance of inflexible justice, and passing the same judgment which he intends hereafter judicially to declare. Grew.

JUDICIARY. adj. [judicare, Fr. judicarius, Latin.] Passing judgment upon any thing.

Before weight be laid upon judiciary astrologers, the influence of constellations ought to be made out. Boyle.

JUDICIOUS. adj. [judicieux, French.] Prudent; wise; skilful in any matter or affair.

For your husband,
He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' th' season. Shaksp.
Love hath his seat
In reason, and is judicious. Milton.

To each favour meaning we apply,
And palate call judicious. Milton.
We are beholden to judicious writers of all ages for those discoveries they have left behind them. Locke.

JUDICIOUSLY. adv. [from judicious.] Skilfully; wisely; with just determination.

So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
That your least praise is to be regular. Dryden.
Longinus has judiciously preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to excellence. Dryden.

JUG. n. f. [jugg, Danish.] A large drinking vessel with a gibbous or swelling belly.

You'd rail upon the hostess of the house,
Because she brought stone jugs and no foal'd quarts. Shaksp.

He fetch'd 'em drink,
Fill'd a large jug up to the brim. Swift.

To JUGGLE. v. n. [jougler or jongler, Fr. joculari, Latin.]

show false appearances of extraordinary performances.

The ancient miracle of Memnon's statue seems to be a juggling of the Ethiopian priests. Digby on Bodies.

2. To practise artifice or imposture.

Be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense. Shaksp.
Is't possible that spells of France should juggle Men into such strange mockeries? Shaksp.
They ne'er forswore themselves, nor lied,
Disdain'd to stay for friends' consents;
Nor juggled about settlements. Hudibras.

JUGGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A trick by legerdemain.

2. An imposture; a deception.
The notion was not the invention of politicians, and a juggle of state to cozen the people into obedience. Tillotson.

JUGGLER. n. f. [from juggle.]

1. One who practises slight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working foresters that change the mind,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shaksp.
I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought. Bacon.
Andreas was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Cæsar, and a notable juggler. Sandy's Travels.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostors, daily delude them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The juggler which another's slight can show,
But teaches how the world his own may know. Garrick.

One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles. Addison's Freeholders.

What magick makes our money rise,
When dropt into the southern main;
Or do these jugglers cheat our eyes? Swift.

2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.

O me, you juggler; oh, you canker blossom,
You thief of love; what have you come by night,
And stol'n my love's heart from him? Shaksp.
I sing no harm

To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Deane.

JUGGLINGLY. adv. [from juggle.] In a deceptive manner.

A gentleman was wounded into the internal jugular, through his neck. Wise man's Surgery.

JUICE. n. f. [jus, French; juy, Dutch.]

1. The liquor, sap, or water of plants and fruits.

If I define wine, I must say, wine is a juice not liquid, or wine is a substance; for juice includes both substance and liquid. Watts.

Unnumber'd fruits,
A friendly juice to cool thir'st's rage contain. Thomson.

2. The fluid in animal bodies.

Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone. Ben Jonson's Difference.

An animal whose joints are unbound can never be nourished: unbound juices can never repair the fluids. Arbutnot.

JUICELESS. adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice.

Divine Providence has spread her table every where; not with a succulent green carpet, but with succulent herbage and nourishing grails. Blair.

When Boreas' spirit blusters sore, Beware th' inclement heav'n's; now let thy hearth
Crackle with juicelst boughs. Philips.

JU'ICINESS. n. f. [from juice.] Plenty of juice; succulence.

JU'ICY. adj. [from juice.] Moist; full of juice; succulent.

Earth being taken out of watery woods, will put forth herbs of a fat and juicy substance.
Bacon's Natural History.

Each plant and juicy gourd will pluck.

The musk's surpassing worth! that, in its youth,
Its tender nunnage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring. Philips.

To JUKE. v. n. [juer, French.]

1. To perch upon any thing as birds.

2. Juking, in Scotland, denotes still any complaisance by bending of the head.

Two asses travelled; the one laden with oats, the other with money: the money-merchant was so proud of his trust, that he went juking and tossing of his head. L'Estrange.

JU'JUB. n. f. [zinyphus, Lat.] A

JU'JUBES. plant whose flower consists little flesh upon the stone. Miller.

JU'LAP. n. f. [A word of Arabick original; julapium, low Lat. julep, Fr.] An extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serving for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone.
Quincy.

Behold this cordial julap here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixt.
Milton.

If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour the bringing that away; and by good ludoriffs and cordials expel the venom, and con-temperate the heat and acrimony by julaps and emulsions. Wise man's Surgery.

JU'LUS. n. f.

1. July flower.

2. Julus, lunol, among botanists, denotes those long worm-like tufts or palms, as they are called, in willows, which at the beginning of the year grow out, and hang pendular down from hazels, walnut-trees, &c. Miller.

JU'LV. n. f. [Julius, Latin; juliet, Fr.]
The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March, named July in honour of Julius Caesar; the seventh month from January.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt. Peachment.

JUMART. n. f. [French.]

Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent. Locke.

To JU'MBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer, jombres from combler, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.

Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy scripture. Locke.

Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky means make people wise?

And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.

Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were created, and are ordered for the best, than that the universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter? Bentley.

How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope.

That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy.
Swift.

To JU'MBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.

JU'MBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

Had the world been congmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.

What jumble here is made of ecclesiastical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal justice. Swift.

JU'MENT. n. f. [jument, French; jumentum, Latin.] Beast of burden.

Juments, as horses, oxen, and asses, have no eructation, or belching. Brown's Vulg. Err.

1. To leap; to skip; to move without step or sliding.

Not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and an half by the square. Shakespeare.

The herd come jumping by me,
And fearless quench their thirst, while I look on,
And take me for their fellow-citizen. Dryden.

So have I seen from Severn's brink,
A flock of geese jump down together,
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And swimming never wet a feather. Swift.

Candidates petition the emperor to entertain the court with a dance on the rope; and whoever jumps the highest succeeds in the office.
Gulliver's Travels.

2. To leap suddenly.

One Peregrinus jumped into a fiery furnace at the Olympick games, only to shew the company how far his vanity could carry him. Cottler.

We see a little, presume a great deal, and so jump to the conclusion. Spektator.

3. To jolt.

The noise of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chaises. Naham.

That I am Viola. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

In some sort it jumps with my humour. Shakespeare.

But though they jump not on a just account,
Yet do they all conhrm a Turkish fleet.

Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barbarous nations. Shaksp.
Herein perchance he jumps not with Lipfius. Hakewill.

Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras.

This shews how perfectly the jump
And commonwealth in nature jump:

For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;
So in this mangled state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras.

Good was jump, and mine, the cimbles of the two. Mure.

Good now, how your devotions jump with mine.

Dryden.
I am happier for finding our judgments jump
in the notion. Pope to Swift.

To JUMP. v. a. To pass by a leap; to pass eagerly or carelessly over.

Here, upon this bank and shelf of time,
We'd jump the life to come. Shaksp. Macbeth.

JUMP. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.

Otherwise one man could not excel another,
but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or center wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of welldoers. Hooker.

But since to jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,

Are here arriv'd. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Shakespeare's Othello.

JUMP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of jumping; a leap; a skip;
a bound.

The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that, which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly conjoined with what he knows already, as is possible.
Locke.

2. A lucky chance.

Do not exceed
The precept of this scrowl: our fortune lies Upon this jump. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

JU'NCTURE. n. f. [junctura, Latin.]

1. The line at which two things are joined together.

Besides those grosser elements of bodies, salt, sulphur, and mercury, there may be ingredients of a more subtle nature, which, being extremely little, may escape unheeded at the junctures of the diffusatory vessels, though never so carefully luted. Boyle.

2. Joint; articulation.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being less in danger of breaking than if they were all one entire bone without those guilty junctures. Mure.

All other animals have transverse bodies; and though some do raise themselves upon their hinder legs to an upright posture, yet they cannot endure it long, neither are the figures or junctures, or order of their bones, fitted to such a posture. Hale.

3. Union ; amity.

Nor are the soberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and junifure of hearts, which I desire to bear in those holy offices to be performed with me. King Charles.

4. A critical point or article of time.

By this profession in that junifure of time, they bid farewell to all the pleasures of this life. Addif.
When any law does not conduce to the publick safety, but in some extraordinary junifures, the very observation of it would endanger the community, that law ought to be laid asleep. Addifon.

JUNE. n. f. [Jun, Fr. Junius, Lat.]

The sixth month from January.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark green. Pracham.

JUNIOR. adj. [junior, Lat.] One younger than another.

The fools, my juniors, by a year,
Are tortur'd with suspense and fear,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd to stand between. Swift.

According to the nature of men of years, I was repining at the rise of my juniors, and unequal distribution of wealth. Tatler.

JUNIPER. n. f. [juniperus, Lat.] A tree.

A clyster may be made of the common decoctions, or of mallows, bay, and juniper berries, with oil of linseed. Wifeman.

You are so merciful, I see your end,
'Tis my undoing. Shakspeare.

I sing no harm, good south ! to any night,
Juror, or judge. Donne.

About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in. Hayward.

JURY. n. f. [jurata, Lat. juré, Fr.] A company of men, at twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question.

There be three manners of trials in England : one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the clerk or clerk make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest : if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest : the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the baron of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner : so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize, assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, encompassed upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most numerous in the half-year courts of the justices errant, commonly called the great assize, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes ; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest, whereas the general assize, there are usually many jurors, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit jurors. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court ; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, Nulla vera, or disallow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance ; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari ; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least ; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant : according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began ; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the wisdom of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowell.

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the town twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. Shakspeare.

How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shakspeare.

Clotius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken bribes of money before they gave up their verdict. Bacon.

JURYMAN. n. f. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign
And wretches hung that jurymen may dine. Pope.

No judge was known, upon or off the bench,
To use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single jurymen, much less of a whole jury. Swift.

JO'RYMAST. n. s. It seems to be properly durée maff, mât de durée, a maff made to last for the present occasion. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a maff lost in a fight or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost maff, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the millen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a shift to sail. Harris.

JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Lat.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age. Dryd.
Men are commonly to just to virtue and goodness, as to praise it in others, even when they do not practise it themselves. Tillotson.

2. Honest; without crime in dealing with others.

Just balances, just weights, and a just ephah. Leviticus.

3. I know not whether just of has any other authority.

4. Exact; proper; accurate.

Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expressions noble, his thoughts just, his language pure, and his sense close. Dryden.

These scenes were wrought,
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought. Granville.

Just precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from Heav'n. Pope.

Just to the tale, as present at the story,
Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.
Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they say,
A certain hard encounter'ing on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As ere could Dennis of the laws o' th' stage. Pope.

Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watts' Logic.

5. Virtuous; innocent; pure.

How should man be just with God? Job.
A just man falleth seven times and riseth. Proverbs.

He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Milton.
The just th' unjust to serve.

6. True; not forged.

Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit. Hooker.

7. Grounded on principles of justice; rightful.

Me though just right
Did first create your leader. Milton.

8. Equally retributed.

He received a just recompence of reward. Hebr.
Whose damnation is just. Romans.
As Hehod sings, spread water o'er thy fields,
And a moist just and glad increase it yields. Drum.

9. Complete without superfluity or defect.

He was a comely personage, a little above just stature, well and strait limbed, but slender. Bacon.

10. Regular; orderly.

When all
The war shall stand ranged in its just array,
And dreadful pomp, then will I think on thee. Addison.

11. Exactly proportioned.

The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship
To meet his grace, just distance 'twixt our armies? Shakspeare.

12. Full; of full dimensions.

His soldiers had skirmishes with the Numidians, so that once the skirmish was like to have come to a just battle. Kaestler.

There is not any one particular above mentioned, but would take up the business of a just volume. Hale.

There seldom appeared a just army in the civil wars. Dutche's of Newcastle.

JUST. adv.

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

The god Pan guided my hand just to the heart of the beast. Sidney.

They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be established. Hooker.

There, ev'n just there he stood; and as the spoke,
Where last the spectre was, the east her look. Dryden.

A few understand him right; just as when our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Bentley.
'Tis with our judgment as our watches, none Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

2. Merely; barely.

It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all. L'Estrange.

The Nereids swam before

To smooth the seas; a soft eolian gale
But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail. Dryden.

Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
That so I neither may be rich nor poor;
And having just enough, not covet more. Dryd.

3. Nearly; almost; tantum non.

Being spent with age, and just at the point of death, Democritus called for leaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

JUST. n. s. [juste, French.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt; tournament.

Just is more proper.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and lance. Sidney.

What news? said those justs and triumphs? Shakspeare.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,
In equal squadrons rang'd on either side,
Then turn'd their horses' heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryden.

TO JUST. v. n. [jouster, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.

2. To push; to drive; to jiltle.

JUSTICE. n. s. [justice, French; justitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due: opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates; or commutative, respecting common transactions between men.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2. Sum

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stability,
I have no reliof of them. Shakspeare.

The nature and office of justice bring to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Locke.

2. Equity; agreeableness to right: as, he proved the justice of his claim.

3. Vindicative retribution; punishment: opposed to mercy.

He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut.
Let justice overtake us. Isaiah.

Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others. Bacon.

4. Right; assertion of right.

Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakspeare.

5. [justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment.

And thou, Estras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. Esdras.

6. JUSTICE of the King's Bench. [justiciarius de Banco Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Anglia. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants hearth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowell.

Give that whipster his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice's warrant. Prior.

7. JUSTICE of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowell.

8. JUSTICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Foresta.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert: of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowell.

9. JUSTICES of Assize. [justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assizes; the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Cowell.

10. JUSTICES in Eyre. [justicarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in Eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowell.

11. JUSTICES of Gaol Delivery. [justicarii ad Guolos deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprise those prisoners that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorized to this. Cowell.

12. JUSTICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day: nisi prius justicarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowell.

13. JUSTICES of Peace. [justicarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowell.

The justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakespeare.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Shakespeare.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction. Bacon.

To JUSTICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. Not in use.

As for the title of proconsul, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justified himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Steward, a Scot, was apprehended for intending to poison the young queen of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be justified by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JUSTICEMENT. n. s. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JUSTICER. n. s. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word.

He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.

JUSTICESHIP. n. s. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Savile.

JUSTICIABLE. adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JUSTIFIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason.

Just are the ways of God,
And justifiably to men. Milton's Agonistes.
Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

JUSTIFIABLENESS. n. s. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JUSTIFIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right; defensibly.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICATION. n. s. [justification, Fr. justification, low Latin.]

1. Absolution.

I hope for my brother's justification; he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakespeare.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support.

Among theological arguments in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. St. fr.

3. Deliverance by pardon from sins past. Clarke.

In such righteousness
To them by faith imputed, they may find Justification towards God, and peace
Of conscience. Milton's Par. Lost.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring forth works; if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JUSTIFICATION. n. s. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JUSTIFIER. n. s. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Romans.

To JUSTIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justify, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor;
I cannot justify whom law condemns. Shakespeare.
They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. Matthews.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Job.
There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifieth in judgment. Ecclesi.

Sins may be forgiven through repentance, but no act of wit of man will ever justify them. Sherlock.

You're neither justified nor yet accus'd. Dryd.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.
When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute onitor, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel fallaciousness. Stany.

What she did, whatever in itself,
Her doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milton.

My unwilling fight the gods enforce,
And that must justify our sad divorce. Denham.
Yet till thy tools shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense. Dryd.
Let others justify their missions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Atterbury.

3. To free from past sin by pardon.

By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. St. fr.

To JUSTLE. v. n. [from just, joust, French.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance Puts back leave taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoinders. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
The chariot shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways. Newton.

Argo pass'd,
Through Bosphorus, betwixt the justling rocks. Milton.

Late the clouds
Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock.

Time the flash lightning.
Not one starry spark, Milton's Par. Lost.

But gods meet gods, and justle in the dark. Lee.
Courtiers therefore justle for a grant;
And, when they break their friendship, plead their want.

The more remote run stumbling with their fears. Dryden.

And, in the dark, men justle as they meet.

When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and castles justled in the air,
My sword thy way to victory had shown. Dryden.

Was there not one who had set bars and doors to it, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be staid;
then might we well expect such vicissitudes, such justlings and clashings in nature. Woodward.

I thought the dean had been too proud
To justle here among a cloud. Swift.

To JUSTLE. v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it. It is commonly used with a particle following, as out or off.

Private and single abilities should not justle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justl'd off by their intrusions. Brown's Vulgar Err.

The surly commons shall respect deny,
And justle peerage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuses of writing can ever be justl'd out of their possession of all libraries. Holler.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a post. Cowley.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justl'd out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel.

We justled one another out, and disputed the post for a great while. Adams.

JUSTLY. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner.
Nothing can justly be despised, that cannot justly be blamed: where there is no choice, there can be no blame. Saunders.

With ignominy scourg'd, in open fight:
Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging sword
Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd. Dryden.

J U T

The goddess, audious of her Grecians fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting justly, and in writing well. Prior.
J. Properly; exactly; accurately.
Their artful hands instruct the lute to sound,
Their feet assist their hands, and justly beat the ground. Dryden.

JU'STNESS. n. f. [from just.]

1. Justice; reasonableness; equity. Justness is properly applied to things, and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whose success useth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made.

Spenser on Ireland.

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it.

Shakspeare.

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety. In this sense it is now most used.

I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented, with all the justness and gracefulness of action. Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatick poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions. Addison.

To JUT. v. n. [Supposed to be corrupted from jut, perhaps from shoot.] To push or shoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk.

J U V

Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awless thrown. Shakspeare.
All the projected or jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the cornices of the lower orders. Wootton.

The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck, and jutting to the sea. Dryden.

Broke by the jutting land on either side;
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden.

It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem, and be independent of it. Brown.

To JUTTY. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like a brass cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base, Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shakspeare.

JUVENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Latin.]

Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhaust. Bacon's Essays.

JUVENILITY. n. f. [from juvenile.]

1. Youthfulness.

The restoration of grey hairs to juvility, and renewing exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle. Glanville.

2. Light and careless manner.

J Y M

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications. Glanville.

JUSTAPPOSITION. n. f. [juxtaposition, Fr. junta and positio, Latin.] Apposition; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a mere juxtaposition. Glanville.

J'VV. n. f. [jiz, Saxon; bedera, Lat.]

A plant.

It is a parasitick plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment. Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool;
A belt of straw, and jy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my love. Raleigh.
Direct the clasping jy where to climb. Milton.

JY'MOLD. ad. See GIMAL.

Their prior jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;

And in their pale dull mouths the jymold bit
Lies, foul with chew'd grafs, still and motionless. Shakspeare.

K.

K A L

K. A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, ken, ken, kill. It is used after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, stick, plack, check, which were written anciently with e final; as clocke, checke, tricke. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e final: as, cloke, broke, brake, pike, duke, &c. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shoot, leek. The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KALENDAR. n. f. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour

KISSINGCRUST. n. f. [kissing and crust.] Crust formed where one loaf in the oven touches another.

These bak'd him kissingcrusts, and those Brought him small beer.

King's Cookery.

KIT. n. f. [kute, Dutch.]

1. A large bottle.

Skinner.

2. A small diminutive fiddle.

'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing master's air.

Green's Museum.

3. A small wooden vessel, in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town.

KITCHEN. n. f. [kegin, Welsh; kego, Flemish; cykene, Saxon; cuisine, Fr. cucina, Italian; kyben, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.

Their being culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass.

Spenser.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of hear'n, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use?

Hunter.

He was taken into service in his court to a bate office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown.

Bacon.

We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire.

Pope.

KITCHENGARDEN. n. f. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.

Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchen-gardens.

Bacon.

A kitchen-garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangey.

Spectator.

KITCHENMAID. n. f. [kitchen and maid.]

A maid under the cookmaid, whose business is to clean the utensils of the kitchen.

KITCHENSTUFF. n. f. [kitchen and stuff.]

The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan.

As a thrifty wench escapes kitchenstuff,
And barrelling the droppings and the snuff.
Of waiting candles, which in thirty year,
Religiously keeps, perchance buys wedding cheer.

Donne.

Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel-preaching ministry

Hudibras.

KITCHENWENCH. n. f. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.

Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench.

Shakspeare.

Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench.

Swift.

KITCHENWORK. n. f. [kitchen and work.]

Cookery; work done in the kitchen.

KITE. n. f. [cya, Saxon; milvus.]

1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Shakspeare.

The heron, when the south wind high, so as sometimes he is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather.

Bacon.

A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle.

Green.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.

Detested kite! thou liest.

Shakspeare.

3. A fictitious bird made of paper.

A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Goo. of the Tongue.

K N A

KITESFOOT. n. f. A plant. Ainsw.
KITTEN. n. f. [katteken, Dutch.] It is probable that the true singular is kit, the diminutive of cat, of which the old plural was kitten or young cats, which was in time taken for the singular, like chicken.
 A young cat.

That a mare will sooner drown than an horse, is not experienced; nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown.
 It was scratched in playing with a kitten. H'sman.

Helen was just slipped into bed;
 Her eyelids on the toilet lay,
 Away the kitten with them fled,
 As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.

TO KITTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.

So it would have done
 At the same season, if your mother's cat
 Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shakspeare.

The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak,
 and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it. L'Estrange.

TO KICK. v. n. [from clack.]

1. To make a small sharp noise.
2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer, or steal away suddenly with a snatch.

TO KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knab, Erse.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so that knab and knag may be the same.

I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with care. L'Estrange.

An ass was wishing, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estrange.

KNABBLE. v. n. [from knab.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is perhaps found no where else.

Horses will knabble at walls, and rats gnaw them. Brown.

KNACK. n. f. [cnapunge, skill, Saxon.]

1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.

When I was young, I was wont
 To load my she with knacks: I would have ransack'd
 The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it
 To her acceptance. Shakspeare.

For thee, fond boy,
 If I may ever know thou dost but sigh
 That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
 I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success. Shakspeare.

This cap was moulded on a porringer,
 A velvet dish; he, he, 'tis lewd and filthy;
 Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
 A knack, a toy, a tick, a baby's cap. Shakspeare.
 But is 't not presumption to write verse to you,
 Who make the better poems of the two?
 For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
 Alas! what are they but poems in prose! Denham.

He expounded both his pockets,
 And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
 A copper-plate, with almanacks
 Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.

2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

I'll teach you the knacks
 Of eating of flax,
 And out of their noses
 Draw ribbands and posies. Ben Jonson's Cyphers
 The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware

all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.

There is a certain knack in conversation that gives a good grace by the manner and address. L'Estrange.

Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack
 Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.

My author has a great knack at remarks; in the end he makes another about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The dean was famous in his time,
 And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.

3. A nice trick.
 For how should equal colours do the knack?
 Camcleons who can paint in white and black? Pope.

TO KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks.

KNACKER. n. f. [from knack.]

1. A maker of small work.
 One pair for plow-right, knacker and smith. Mortimer.

2. A ropemaker. [refio, Latin.] Ainsw.

KNAG. n. f. [knag, a wart, Danish. It is retained in Scotland.] A hard knot in wood.

KNAGGY. adj. [from knag.] Knotty; set with hard rough knots.

KNAP. n. f. [cnap, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece; cnap, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance; a swelling prominence.

You shall see many fine fests set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathered as in troughs. Bacon.

TO KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]

1. To bite; to break short.
 He knappeth the spear in sunder. Com. Prayer.
 He will knapp the spears a-piece with his teeth. Mure.

2. [knapp, Erse.] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.
Knapp a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the sound of the tongs. Bacon's Natural History.

TO KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.

I reduced the shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knap in before they knew they were out. H'sman.

KNAPBOTTLE. n. f. [papaver spumeum.] A plant.

TO KNAPPLE. v. n. [from knap.] To break off with a sharp quick noise.

KNAPSACK. n. f. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, 'till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.

If you are for a merry journey, I'll try for once who can foot it fastest: there are hedges in summer, and barns in winter: I with my knapsack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden.

KNAPWEED. n. f. [jacea, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

KNARE. n. f. [knar, German.] A hard knot.

A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground,
 And prickly stubs instead of trees are found;
 Or woods with knots and knars deform'd and old,
 Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

K N E

KNAVE. n. f. [cnaps, Saxon.]

1. A boy; a male child.
2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.

For as the moon the eye doth please

With gentle beams not hurting sight,

Yet hath fir sun the greater praise;

Because from him doth come her light;

So if my man must praise have,

What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.

He eats and drinks with his domestic slaves,

A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.

Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. Smith.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crazy knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.

An honest man may take a knave's advice; but idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.
 See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it.

For 'twill return, and turn t' account,
 If we are brought in play upon't,
 Or but by casting knaves get in,
 What pow'r can hinder us to win! Hudibras.

KNAVEERY. n. f. [from knave.]

1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villany.

Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Shakspeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do it; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakspeare.

The cunning courtier should be slighted too,
 Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;
 'Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,
 Like Alop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps of trifling things of more cost than use.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best,
 With amber bracelets, beads and all this knave's. Shakspeare.

KNAVEISM. adj. [from knave.]

1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knave's to do it from friends. Pope's Letters.

2. Waggish; mischievous.

Here comes civil and sad;
 Cupid is a knave's lad,
 Thus to make poor females mad. Shakspeare.

KNAVEISHLY. adv. [from knave's.]

1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.
2. Waggishly; mischievously.

TO KNEAD. v. n. [cnæban, Saxon; kneden, Dutch.] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the knading, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakspeare.

It is a lump, where all beasts knaded lay,
 Wisdom makes him an ark, where all agree. Donne.

Thus knaded up with milk the new-made man
 His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
 'Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderstanding,
 And pride of empire, pour'd his halm blood. Dryden.

One part of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,
 And knaded up shak with mould'ning blood. Dryden.

Prometheus, in the knading up of the heart, fasten'd it with some fœd'ring particles of the lion. Adrian's Spectator.

KNE

No man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,
Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,
That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.
The cake she kneaded was the fav'ry meat. Prior.

KNE'ADINGTROUGH. n. f. [knead and trough.] A trough in which the palte of bread is worked together.

Frogs shall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Exodus.

KNEE. n. f. [cneop, Sax. knee, Dut.]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal father
Was a most fainter king: the queen that bore thee
Ofstener upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day the liv'd. Shakespeare

Scotch flunk is a kind of strong nourishment made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and clasp thy knees. Milton.
Wearied with length of ways, worn out with toil,

To lay down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;
And cast her languishing regards above,
For help from heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden

2. A piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Mason's Mech. Exer.

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tolled; but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.

Go you that banish'd him, a mile before his tent, fall down, and knee the way into his mercy. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Return with her!
Why, the hot blooded France that dow'rie's took Our youngest born: I could as well be brought To knee his throne, and squire-like pension beg. Shakespeare.

KNEED. adj. [from knee.]

1. Having knees: as, in-kneed, or out-kneed.

2. Having joints: as, kneed gials.

KNEEDEEP. adj. [knee and deep.]

1. Riling to the knees.

2. Sunk to the knees.

The country peasant meditates no harm,
When clad with skins of beasts to keep him warm;

In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,
Almost kneedeep, through mire in clumsy shoes. Dryden.

KNE'EDGRASS. n. f. [gramen geniculatum.] An herb.

KNE'RHOLM. n. f. [aquifolium] An herb. Ainsworth.

KNE'EPAN. n. f. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both sides, and covered with a smooth cartilage on its fore-side. It is soft in children, but very hard in those of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it passes the tendon of the muscles which extend the leg, to which it serves as a pulley. Quincy.

The kneepan must be shown, with the knitting thereof, by a fine shadow underneath the joint. L'cuchon on Drawing.

To KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflexion; to bend the knee.

When thou dost ask me I'll kneel down
And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakespeare.

KNI

Ere I was risen from the place that shew'd
My duty kneeling, came a seeking post,
Stew'd in his halber, half breathing, panting forth
From General, his mistress, salutation. Shaksp.
A certain man kneeling down to him, said, Lord, have mercy upon my soul; for he is lunatick. Matthew.

As soon as you are dressed, kneel and say the Lord's prayer. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

KNE'TRIBUTE. n. f. [knee and tribute.] Genuflexion; worship or obedience shown by kneeling.

Receive from us
Kne'tribute yet unpaid, prostration vile. Milton.
KNE'L. n. f. [knell, Welch, a funeral pile; cnellan, to ring, Sax.] The found of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not wish them to a fairer death,
And to his knell is knoll'd. Shakespeare.

Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark, now I hear them. Shakespeare's Tempest.
When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was flurr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shakespeare.

All these motions, which we saw,
Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Dante.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
Unhappy 'till the knell, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung;
The am'rous youth around her bow'd:
At night her fatal knell was rung;

I saw, and kiss'd her in her throat. Prior.

KNEW. The preterit of know.

KNIFE. n. f. plur. knives. [cnip, Sax. kniff, Danish.] An instrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Come, thick night,
And pull thee in the dunnet smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakespeare.

Best powers, forbid thy tender life
Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw.
The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden's Æneid.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,
And trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dryden.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.

KNIGHT. n. f. [cnithr, Sax. knecht, Germ. a servant, or pupil.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

That lame knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenser.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser.

When every case in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight. Shaksp.

This knight; but yet why should I call him
knig?

To give impiety to this rev'rent knig? Daniel's Civil War.

No squire with knight did better fit
In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.

2. Shakespeare uses it of a female; and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

KNI

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that flew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakespeare.

3. A champion.

He suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the porther;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post. Drayton.

Did I for this my country bring
To help their knights against their king,
And raise the first sedition? Denham.

KNIGHT errant. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in fights;
They cut whole giants into scinters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT errantry. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the post. A hireling evidence; a knight dubbed at the whipping post, or pillory.

There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions; where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South.

KNIGHT of the shire. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a-year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.

Favours came thick upon him: the next St.
George's day he was knighted. Hickson.

The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.

KNIGHTLY. adv. [from knight.] Befitting a knight; becoming a knight.

Let us take care of your wound upon condition that a more knightly combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.

How darest you pride presume against my laws:
As in a lifted field to fight your cause:
Unask'd the royal grant; no martial ay,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

KNIGHTHOOD. n. f. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

The sword which Merlin made,
For that his nourishing, when he knighted swore,
Therewith to doon his foes eternal smart. Spenser.

Speak truly or thy knighthood, and thine oaths,
And so defend thee Heaven and thy valour. Shakespeare.

Is this the sir, who some waste wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a-wandering in? Ben Jonson.

If you needs must write, write Charles's praise,
You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays. Pope.

KNI'GHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.

Arise, thou cursed miscreant,
That hast with knightless guile, and treacherous train,

Fair knighthood foully flamed. Fairy Queen.

To KNIT. v. a. pret. knit or knitted.
[cristtan, Saxon.]

1. To make or unite by texture without a loom.

Sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care,
The birth of each day's life, fore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
A thousand Cupids in those curls do sit;
Thou curious nets thy slender fingers knit.
Waller.

2. To tie.

Send for the county; go tell him of this;
I'll have this knit up to-morrow morning.
Shakespeare.

3. To join; to unite. This was formerly a word of extensive use; it is now less frequent.

His gall did grate for grief and high disdain,
And knitting all his forces, got one hand free.
Spenser.

These, mine enemies, are all knit up
In their distractions: they are in my power.
Shakespeare.

O let the vile world end,
And the promised flames of the last day
Knit earth and heav'n together! Shakespeare.
Lay your highness'

Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit. Shakespeare.

This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league. Shakespeare.

By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
By that which knitteth souls, and prospers loves.
Shakespeare.

If ye be come peaceably, mine heart shall be knit unto you. Chron.

That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love. Calistano.

He doth fundamentally and mathematically demonstrate the firmest knittings of the upper timbers, which make the roof. Watson's Architecture.

Pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Urlop the chair of wit. Ben Jonson's New Inn.
Ye knit my heart to you by asking this question.
Bacon.

These two princes were agreeable to be joined in marriage, and thereby knit both realms into one. Hayward.

Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
To a light fantastick round. Milton.

God gave several abilities to several persons,
that each might help to supply the publick needs, and by joining to fill up all wants, they be knit together by justice, as the parts of the world are by nature. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.

Nature cannot knit the bones while the parts are under a discharge. Hjerman's Surgery.

4. To contract.

What are the thoughts that knit thy brow in frowns,
And turn thy eyes so coldly on thy prince.
Addison's Cato

5. To tie up.

He saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him as it had been a great sheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth. Acts.

To KNIT. v. n.

1. To weave without a loom.

A young shepherdesse knitting and singing:
her voice comforted her hands to work, and her hands kept time to her voice's music. Sidney.

Make the world distinguish Julia's son
From the vile offspring of a trull, that sits
By the town-wall, and for her living knits.
Dryden.

2. To join; to close; to unite. Not used.

Our sever'd navy too
Have knit again; and float, threac'ning most sea-like. Shakespeare.

KNIT. n. f. [from the verb.] Texture.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferant knit. Shakespeare.

KNITTER. n. f. [from knit.] One who weaves or knits.

The spinners and the knitters in the sun,
And the three maids that weave their thread
with bones,
Do use to chant it. Shakespeare.

KNITTINGNEEDLE. n. f. [knit and needle.]

A wire which women use in knitting.
He gave her a cuff on the ear, she would prick him with her knittingneedle. Arbutnot.

KNITTLE. n. f. [from knit.] A string that gathers a purse round. Ainsworth.

KNOB. n. f. [cnap, Saxon; knoop, Dutch.] A protuberance; any part bluntly rising above the rest.

Just before the entrance of the right auricle of the heart is a remarkable knob or bunch, raised up from the subjacent fat. Roy.

KNOBBED. adj. [from knob.] Set with knobs; having protuberances.

The horns of a roe deer of Greenland are pointed at the top, and knobbed or tuberos at the bottom. Grew.

KNOBBINESS. n. f. [from knobby.] The quality of having knobs.

KNOBBY. adj. [from knob.]

1. Full of knobs.

2. Hard; stubborn.

The informers continued in a knobby kind of obstinacy, resolving still to conceal the names of the authors. Hewel.

To KNOCK. v. n. [cnuccian, Saxon; cnoce,
a blow, Welsh.]

1. To clash; to be driven suddenly together.

Any hard body thrust forwards by another body contiguous, without knocking, giveth no noise. Bacon's Natural History.

They may say, the atoms of the chaos being variously moved according to this catholic law, must needs knock and interfere. Brady.

2. To beat as at a door for admittance:
commonly with at.

Villain, I say knock me at this gate,
And rap me well; or I'll knock your knave's pate! Shakespeare.

Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fight them, ere destroy. Shakespeare.

I hid the rascal knock upon your gate,
And could not get him for my heart to do it.
Shakespeare.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd,
Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd.
Dryden.

Knock at your own breast, and ask your soul,
If those fair fatal eyes edg'd not your sword.
Dryden.

3. To Knock under. A common expression, which denotes that a man yields or submits. Submission is expressed among good fellows by knocking under the table. Followed commonly

To fasten knots, which fancy first had bound.
Sidney.

As the fair vessel to the fountain came,
Let none be flatted at a vessel's name,
Tir'd with the walk, she laid her down to rest;
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,

To take the freshness of the morning air,
And gather'd in a knot her flowing hair. Addison
2. Any figure of which the lines frequently intersect each other.

Garden knots, the frets of houses, and all equal figures, please: whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon

Our sea-wall'd garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her knots disorder'd. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
It fed flow'rs worthy of paradise, which not nice art

In beds and curious knots, but nature boon,
Pour'd forth profuse on hill and dale and plain. Milton

Their quarters are contrived into elegant knots,
Adorned with the most beautiful flowers. Morse
Henry in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half-express'd, and half-conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That, as the wound, the passion might increase. Prior

3. Any bond of association or union.

Confirm that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant That virtuous lady Bona. Shaksp. Henry VI.
Richmond aims
